32-bit files use a different file extension, like.dwg or.dwg32. A: Based on your follow up comments, it sounds like it could be featureCam. I'll try to get back to you later this week. But a little bit of background, featureCam is a 32bit component in ArcGIS, and it is an implementation of the ICM format, which is a fairly new format, and a licensed format by its way. You can download featureCam here. The only requirements for it are Windows XP or later, and it must be installed on the server that will be hosting the project. What you want to do is use a tool to convert the ICM file to DWG. This could be a free conversion tool like pdfframework, or any of the others listed on the ESRI website. If you don't want to use featureCam, you should be able to just save your ICM as a DWG file. Does the Fennel Agarita Diaper Bag Need to Be Hand Stitched? by Pamela (USA) I have been reading about and using the diaper bag for about a year now. I am wanting to buy one to carry in my purse. It seems that most of them are hand stitched and all seem like a lot of work. I am wondering if the diaper bag needs to be hand stitched, or if

I can buy one that is not stitched, like ones with velcro and snaps. Is this just a matter of preference, or does the diaper bag need to be stitched? Thank you for any information. Comments for Does the Fennel Agarita Diaper Bag Need to Be Hand Stitched? Hi, I believe that any bag you buy needs to be hand sewn to keep it from falling apart. You might want to check out one of the (I don't know the brand) stitched diaper bags with a cover for them (unless you have a cover already?) or even try to find a nice cheap diaper bag that's already pre-stitched. Good luck! Feb 25, 2011 Rating Do not do this! by: mother of 2 I just bought a hand-stitched diaper bag for my little girl. It's well made, but to me, it's just another stitched item that will fall apart. I would buy a cheaper one 520fdb1ae7
