Woman I knew was told by family not to go to hospital for after a car accident They arrived home but both had been badly injured and taken to hospital. He was in a serious condition, with a cut above his eye, bleeding and a badly broken leg. In hospital, after X-rays revealed that he had broken ribs, they were told he had also suffered a punctured lung. Advert The injuries meant they couldn't have the operation they'd planned. He told me they then went back home again. A few days later, a friend of mine called me to ask what had happened to him. I said he'd had an accident and said I'd had a message from his mum. But she told me she'd said not to go to the hospital and he wasn't going to go because he was in pain. I was shocked. A doctor had told her not to go for fear that if she did, something could happen. Even when the hospital called the police to give a description of the offenders, his mum told them it wasn't worth it because they weren't going to get him anyway. Dads Dad I'm not saying this is how it's supposed to be, and obviously she shouldn't have done it. But she gave me the impression that she believed that if a doctor told her her son had serious injuries, she didn't have to go to the hospital. I felt so upset about it. I think it might have been some kind of post-traumatic stress disorder. My friend felt the same way as me. She told me that if the doctors had said he needed hospitalisation, she would have been open to it. After this incident, I felt like people weren't going to help me and that nobody else would care if anything happened 520fdb1ae7
