According to his family, the artist died on Monday, September 21, at his home in Porter, Texas. Soulful Treat Her Right, written and performed by Head and his band, The Traits, peaked at No. 2 on both the billboard pop and R'B charts, suspended from No.1 on The Beatles' formidable yesterday. For decades, the song has been covered by dozens of artists - including Bon Jovi, Bruce Springsteen, George Thorogood, Jimmy Page, and Jerry Lee Lewis. Treat Her Right has also had a revival in the past five years: in 2016, the son of the Sundance head performed his father's tune on season 11 of The Voice, which he subsequently won. Last year, the song was played at the opening Once Upon a Time in Hollywood. Head was born in Three Rivers, Texas, in January 1941. By high school, the artist and his band, Traits, had signed their first recording contract. Performing a mix of growing styles, including RBC, Rock and Roll and Rockabilly, the teens got a local following, and soon scored several regional hits along the way, including Summertime Love, Once Again, and Live It Up. The young rockers even had the opportunity to perform on Dick Clark's American Bandstand, but were forced to abandon it, as they were all still minors. After several changes in the line-up and a year of Head's tenure in the army, the band released Treat Her Right. Two full-lengths, Roy Head and Traits and Treat Me Right, came soon after. Head followed with the cover of Roscoe Gordon Just a Little, which hit the Top 40, like Apple Of My Eye. Often referred to as Mr. Rubber Foot, Head was also known for his energetic dance moves - both on and off stage. In 1966, in Soul magazine, head said, It's hard to record me because I'm moving and the microphone doesn't pick it all up. Variety included another head anecdote, in which he claimed that he was kicked off the tour by Brown (James) for being too good a dancer. In a way, it was kind of a compliment because I was burnin, he said. ' (Brown) has always been my idol and I was awed only by being on three shows with him. In the 70s, Head changed his musical styles as he pursued a solo career. Highlights include his 1970 LP, the same people (that you meet Going Up, You Meet Going Down), which has become often a sample of cult classics. Later in this decade, and in the mid-80s, he scored several country hits in the U.S. and Canada, including 1977's Come To Me and 1978's Now You See 'Em, Now You Don't. The chapter continued to record until 2011 and maintained a busy schedule of live performances during the past year. In 2007, Roy Head and Cherty were inducted into the Rockabilly Hall of Fame. Head is also a member of the Texas Country and Western Music Hall of Fame, the Austin Music Hall of Fame and the Gulf Coast Music Hall of Fame. Wife Carolyn and son Sundance, who called his father an amazing man and a wonderful father, said in a statement on Facebook. I'm shocked as well as confused. He was a giant to me, he
