Old Urbana house razed

The Garrett house, a 100-year-old farmhouse near Urbana High School on Washington Street, is demolished by Miller Enterprises on Tuesday. It was torn down after several potential buyers found it nearly imposeible to move. The school district, which owns the property, wants to put playing fields there for the middle and high schools. To have the fields available for next school year, officials have said the land must be available by the first week of November. The district bought the home in June 2001. The original owners and three other parties tried unsuccessfully to make arrangements to have it moved.
