Unfortunately, I've gotten a bit of feedback about the value of the game being very low and on the subject of being an inferior version of the Space Hulk board game (in particular). This got me thinking - what value can a game have if there isn't a board game or rules? Has anyone else picked up Space Hulk and wondered just how much of a difference this version makes? I feel that, because of the upgraded graphics, the added components (accessories, hero cards, etc), it has just as much value as the board game. I have no idea why, but when I played Space Hulk Ascension I actually enjoyed it quite a bit more than the original board game. Is it because the Ascension has longer campaigns? That's something that would probably come up in the board game version as well but I just don't know. I've never played the original board game or played the space hulk board game. I guess it's hard for me to compare the two versions since I only have the Ascension version. But I'm sure there's a lot of other players out there that have been playing both games and can compare the two. I would love to get some feedback from that group. I have the Space Hulk Ascension expansion pack and the rules. I have not played any other Space Hulks other than Ascension and the board game, but I can say that the Ascension rules are clearly simpler and make things more understandable. As far as the board game goes, I've heard good things and I'm interested in playing it sometime in the future. I'm about halfway through the Ascension expansion (one playthrough) and I have to say that it's an excellent game with a lot of variety. I like the board game experience but this is a good multiplayer game on its own. Hi All, I have played Space Hulk Ascension for over a year and like it a lot but I have to say that I prefer the board game. The board game is shorter, there are rules to the game and there is a good handbook that tells you everything you need to know. In Space Hulk Ascension, the hero level is pretty much a factor that you never know about until the end. With the board game, you play through several campaigns depending on how you are and you are aware of where you will be at the end of each turn. The characters can be upgraded, added to your squad, and placed in three dimensional space. It's really a very good game and highly recommended 520fdb1ae7
