ANSWER: MYGIRL This post was written by Lee Ann Potter, Director of Educational Outs outs of the Library of Congress. When I wake up in the morning to get my kids ready for school, I take it—I sing. Good morning most days from the 1952 MGM film 'Singin' in the Rain. But on cloudy days, the only song that makes my daughter rise and shine is My Girl, written and produced by Smokey Robinson and Ronald White of The Miracles. Starting with the lines I have sun on a cloudy day i have the month of May outside the cold I guess i have may what will make me feel this way talking about my girl (my girl, my girl) my girl (my girl) my girl (my girl) ... In 1965, it was the first number one single from Temptations. I was thrilled to learn that Smokey Robinson was going to receive the Library of Congress Gershwin Popular Song Award. The Gershwin Award honors the lifetime success of a living music artist in promoting the song type as a means of cultural understanding; entertaining and informing viewers; and inspiring new generations. Robinson certainly did-and his lyrics are capable of waking up to sleepy middle school! The Grammy Award winner has released dozens of Top-40 hits, including, You've Really Got a Hold on Me (1963), Ooo Baby Baby (1965), The Tracks of My Tears (1965), I Second That Emotion (1967), The Tears of a Clown (written with Stevie Wonder, 1970), Cruisin' (1979) and See To Her (1987). As a producer and songwriter, Robinson was the creative force behind many Motown classics voiced by other artists - not just My Girl, but also The Way You Do the Things You Do, Get Ready and My Guy. In the late 1980s, retired music executive Joe Smith interviewed Robinson with more than 200 famous singers, musicians and industry icons. He asked about their lives, their music, their experiences, their motivations and more; and in 2012, he donated his records to the Library of Congress. These intimate and una shortened interviews are digitized by the Library and are now available online as streaming audio in the Joe Smith Collection of 87 of them. Among them He directed it with Smokey Robinson on February 5, 1988. In this 16-minute Off the Record interview, Robinson discussed high school songwing, Barry Gordy's impact on his life, the early years of Motown Records, the importance and spirituality of loving one's work. In the first minute of the interview, when asked if his success came easily, Robinson said, First of all, I feel blessed... I think my life is a blessing. As a teaching tool, enrollment has potential in a history class during a unit of the Civil Rights Movement; in a journalism class focused on interview strategies; a music class talk about elements of the recording industry, and a discussion about the character in any class. In all these cases, enrollment also provides an excellent opportunity for students to practice their listening skills. (You may find the Teacher's Guide to Analyzing Audio Recordings useful). Let us know in your comments about how your students responded to Robinson's interview or whether this post encouraged you to have one of Smokey Robinson's songs sing to your students. Later this week, Congress will present Smokey Robinson with the Carla Hayden Librarian Gershwin Award. The event will be recorded and broadcast on PBS in early 2017. I have sunshine on a cloudy day.
