Service projects for school clubs

The image of a car show by Gary Fotolia.com high school auto shop where the youngest people have the first entry for auto mechanics and auto body. Projects start to get off to a simple start, with students learning what each car owner needs to know. More advanced projects are included as students progress in grades. Auto shop is born where the mechanics of the future are born, so give them projects that will hold their own interests while bestowing the pride of a well-done business. Students can restore an old classic car as a community service project. A donated car, such as a former Mustang, Corvette and even a Volkswagen Beetle, will make a raffle prize for a charity in your community once students are restored. This project can include students from all high school classes, freshmen can approve more simply, down to seniors working on difficult parts of the project. Auto body and auto mechanics can work together on bringing back to life an old car. Proper installation of brakes is a project that can include safety training in this course. Brake pads are not properly assembled along with a lesson in the dangers of allowing you to get too worn out brake samples, which will be a good basis for first class in which the auto mechanic can build his career. The dangers of safely placing a gas tank and trying to fix a leaky tank are another project for students. Everyone knows that the gas is flammable, but many do not understand that the smoke left in a gas tank can be lethal for combustion. In automated body classes, students can have a ding clinic as a community service for their city or city. Little losers can be pulled and dings are stationary to help the towns people. Simple scratches and small notes can be fixed on, the huge expense savings car owners will pay to do this in an autobody store. Use a donation box for money you can use to buy more materials in school. Airbag installation is another project that will be useful to know when fixing a car after a collision. A community service project for students to participate in, a car clinic that will check elderly cars for safety. Brakes, tires, oil, steering fluids and all other safety checks that must be routinely carried out for a car. The elderly may not have the money to handle this as often as necessary. Alternator problem shooting and installation is a common event for a mechanic in the business world. This is a project that will make them ready for the world of working in car mechanics. Startup issues are another project. Rebuilding and changing an anthem is something students need to know if they are continuing in the automotive field. A community service project for people with disabilities installing special tools in a car is something you can take This will not only be useful for students to learn mechanically, but they also learn how good it feels to give to society.
