Top positive reviewsAll positive reviews Dave S.5.0 of 5 starsS, stability, stability - not to mention the beauty and functionality24 April 2016 Build does not tighten (even tightly fingers) none of the bolts and screws. Wait until everything is done. The only exceptions are the two auxiliary bars for the keyboard tray, because the bolts that fasten them to the rest of the table are unavailable as soon as the glass top is attached. The components seem to have been deliberately designed not to fit exactly what is good when done correctly. Some parts resist installing to each other, and so when you finally force them together by tightening the bolts they join under some tension. It's part of the secret to stability. This Line table is remarkably stable. It's a solid rock with no hint of wobble, wiggle, shimmy or shake. Add to that its beauty - cool design, wooden accents, and a nice thick tinted (and I think tempered) glass top - and you have a lovely table at a good price. My only complaint is that the build instructions may be better. There are several pieces like wooden legs that seem to be identical, but actually there are some key differences. As shown in the attached photo, there are two chrome-coated support bars that runs from the bolt socket on the INSIDE of those feet to the bottom of the glass top. Thus, the left and right legs should be on the right side. I caught this, but the schematic pattern in the instructions made it look (for me) as these support bars were attached to the outside of the legs. So in Step 2, I set the wooden legs exactly backwards. This didn't cause any problems at all until I got to Step 5 where the chrome bars are installed and then it's flat doesn't work. The best picture (or better yet, photo) in the instructions can prevent such confusion. This and some other moments of confusion in the instructions added to the assembly time, which for me came about 3 hours in total. However, I still appreciate this table with 5 stars because the end result is just so damn good! 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 There must be detailed instructions packed in your furniture, however, in case it is missing, please contact our customer service hotline at 888-736-2141 or by email: customerservice@z-linedesigns.com and we can email, fax, or send you a copy of the instructions on the same day (the same day until 5:00 pm Pacific time, or the next business day).
