Because families understand how difficult it is to get away from inmates and have specific rules that must be followed by each facility, it is important to familiarize them with the basics of visiting inmates before planning a visit. All visitors must be pre-approved. Your inmates must put you on a pre-approved visit list to visit them, which will be reviewed later by the correctional facility. When considering approval, the correctional facility sees many factors that require all procedures to be carried out. Many facilities limit the number of visitors where inmates need to narrow down the list of potential visitors. All correctional facilities have their own set of rules and must be followed. When you visit, no matter how arbitrary they may look, you are expected to follow the rules of the prison. Inmates you plan to visit should be able to advise you on their prison visit time schedule, but it is recommended that you call the prison in advance to see if the visit is allowed and potential visitors are approved. After the visitor is approved by the correctional facility, they must confirm to their inmates on the day they are allowed to visit. All prisoners will be searched before and after any visit for security reasons. Families visiting their inmates should respect certain prison dress codes otherwise they can refuse to visit. All visitors are expected to present a valid, government-issued photo ID. Pigeonly also introduced a video visit that connects families and inmates when they become difficult to visit, you must first schedule a visit and be approved by your inmate's facility. Before you visit your inmates, check out all the rules you need to follow. If you need help before your visit, you can use Pigeon Inside Search to find inmates at the Wright County Law Enforcement Center. Each facility must follow the rules in accordance with local regulations. Usually, for any institution, you want to make sure that you wear appropriate clothes. Make sure your clothes are not too hard. Different states can have different rules regarding clothing. What to wear in MinnesotaPlease check the appropriate state law of the Minnesota Department of Corrections on the state's official website.
