Why don't you get a few non-carvid pumpkins, no o're'r display, plus a couple computer speakers and have some fun! Really, that's all you need! We've been averaging about 250 kids every Halloween since 2013 and we've had pumpkin singing every year. It's also not ageing I'm a bit of a techie and using a multi-screen setup, but you really don't need any of it. Only singing pumpkins alone is running home! If you want to know how this is done, read below and see Phase 1. And, seriously, stop there. If you want to see how I do a synchronous background screen (since I've been asked), read Phase 2. Here's the highlight video of our 2017 show: Stage 1 - Pumpkin Lyric (Easy) Short Release: Grab a projector, a few unintoxicated pumpkins and buy any pumpkin/song animations you want in the pumpkin site below. They have good lessons there too. That's it! Oh, and if you don't decide to buy, please remember to tell them that a EH130 member sent you. TheSingingPumpkin.com long version: Here's how I pulled it off... Pumpkin Face Animation I bought most of the animation sits TheSingingPumpkin.com and I really like how the liquids appeared and the object. Pumpkin Display I use 2700 Lumen projectors (NEC NP410W, 4:3 ratio) to display faces. I found mine on Craigslist for only $125, with only 17 hours on the original lamp. I've seen others use very little portable monitors, so I imagine you don't need anything fancy like us. Pumpkins only need any three uncarved pumpkins. Or if you use a carved pumpkin, just turn around until the empty side appears. If you plan to do this show often, consider using Funkins (fake reusable pumpkins). I love big pumpkins, so I ordered three big ones, so there's one big one in the middle and two smaller ones on the side is all you need. Funkin Quantum Quantum Quantity Number BUD FUN-KIN W-11.75 H-11.75 (#097) 2 GRANATA FUN-KIN W-15 H-15 (#026) 1 Some AdjustmentsKids does not like to be pulled away from the show. As a nod to the parents, I included 13 to 15 seconds between each song time for adults to whisk their children away. Other edits include: I added a loop to the video so that repeats (obviously) I added chapter tags to each song, so I could skip a song if someone wanted to watch the song again, or I wanted to skip a different song, or I wanted to skip the break (I was a remote computer) I put the string lights as a barrier to prevent children from walking between the monitor and pumpkins I added a colorful disco ball since i love dancing with songs (incredible response) I modify the animated video file so pumpkin faces are higher so I can From the lower projector mode (see screenshots below) I added a second screen (more on it below on stage 2... again, not necessary) referral that's all! If any of this helped and you end up buying some animations from TheSingingPumpkin.com, please tell them that I (eh130 member) sent you. I also enjoy comments and questions, so if you have any, feel free to comment below or email me (email address at the end of this post). Stage 2 - MULTI-SCREEN OK, OFF! You don't need to do any of the below. Seriously, adults and children are amazed enough at singing pumpkins (Stage 1, above), and if you're looking for WOW, that's all you need to do. We've been doing the first phase for years and we could have stopped there! This stage part 2 is only for those who asked me how to synchronize the movie screen behind the singing pumpkins. Multi-screen (complex part) this involves viewing the original pumpkin (as shown above) plus another projector in full sync with the singing pumpkin. Secret... It is fully synced because it is one file. Take a look: This is two movies, side by side in one video file. I know, nothing fancy out there all I did was just find an affordable adapter that split the computer desktop in half. Then I made the full-screen video, plugged in the adapter and viola... The end result is two VGA outputs displaying each half of the video file. Why do you do it this way? If I keep one file, I can keep chapter tags so I can skip songs with my remote. Why skip the songs? Because some kids came back and didn't want to see something they actually saw I was just using my remote and the next song I played (along with a synchronous background file). The end result took a little bit of work, but I managed to create a movie that was 2731 x 768 (it's low resolution since I have a lower resolution projector) that can handle all of the videos side by side. Here's an actual screenshot of the main video: this translates into this: background videos borrowed a lot of cute videos from the internet and put them in my videos and music dedicated to accompanying pumpkins as they are siphoned. It allows this ratio to rise, and it works on my laptop. When you created 2731 768 file, I simply arranged the final pumpkin movie to the left and the final background film to the right. I also put a vertical black bar between the videos to prevent further bleeding. I performed the desktop set to have a wide double resolution (aspect-to-height ratio) and then played full-screen video. The Matrox adapter then magically splits the scene into two projectors. I've worked like magic! The final words children all race to the house with candy on their minds, and then ZAP, the singing pumpkin stops them in their tracks. They stare and don't believe what parents literally look at that drag their children away because they're staring for a very long time. As parents pull, baby eyes stay glued to the show! It's definitely tempting if you decide to do the show, let people in TheSingingPumpkin.com know that EH130 sent you. Questions?
