This year, at the same time as 1,000+ of you are attending IAM's inaugural CMCD in Paris and a thousand more at IAM's 25th I.A.M. World Expo 2017 in Milan, the Association of Interior Design Professionals (AIDP) is opening its doors to the interior design community in London. I'm here, keen to share some of my thoughts with you, for an hour-long live chat and Q&A. Today's session is titled: "Bridging the gender gap" With reference to the recent controversy, as well as our new interior design and design management panel that I will be chairing, the panel will be seeking to answer the following questions: • What are the key challenges facing the industry and what are the key issues being raised by the recent public debate and scandal? • Is this a unique moment of time and space? What about the future? • What steps can the industry take to demonstrate that interior design is a profession that is open to all? • How can you prepare students to balance the needs of the market with the requirements of the profession? • What can we learn from the community of other professions and how can we share with interior design students? • How can we work together to share knowledge, experience and research? • How can we all be stronger and more effective by joining forces? See you on July 3 at 17:00 for a live webchat with myself, fellow panelists and other industry figures and experts. Check the AIDP website for more details. Seen as a design leader in Europe, Catherine Holland-Cohn who is currently in charge of design, architecture, research and development for Surface Design in London has a wealth of experience. She's also a member of I.A.M.'s Design Management Committee, is currently I.A.M.'s spokesperson on training and education, and she is also a prolific author and lecturer. She's talked to me about the future of the profession and the interior design industry, and we'll talk about how you can get involved in making it happen. To book a spot, click here. Hear about the latest on that monumental problem that is social media, and some practical suggestions for what you can do about it.
