The baby boy was born at Emory University Hospital and is the first baby born at the university. According to Fox News, the baby was born on May 4 weighing in at 3 pounds, 7 ounces.

On Saturday, he was seen playing with his older brother and older sister. While his family and friends are ecstatic about the birth, the baby is being monitored by doctors. Phelps-Trimble says doctors are watching for issues that may develop in the baby's lungs, heart, and brain. "The baby's lungs have a lot of work to do. He's not breathing on his own, he's only breathing with the help of the baby monitor. He has a heart monitor hooked up to him because of a concern that he could have a heart problem," Phelps-Trimble said. He says the child's biggest issue is the size of his head. Phelps-Trimble says the child's head size is slightly above the average baby's head size, but still is a very small size. "His head, the doctor said, was too large for the size of his brain. And so he has a lot of special monitoring going on to make sure that the baby doesn't get any undue stress on his brain," Phelps-Trimble said. The baby has made medical history, but as for now, his family and friends are more concerned about his safety and wellbeing.Q: Node.js require module via URL parameter I've been developing a Node.js app that serves for some internal use and am in need of a way to invoke other functions of my app when a URL parameter is received. In my index.html file (with a browser) I've written a simple HTML file which calls a controller function via an HTTP GET request:
