Rob Gronkowski Makes NFL Comeback Welcome To WVXU Enlarge this image toggle caption Joe Howell/AP Joe Howell/AP Rob Gronkowski, the New England Patriots tight end, had a monster season last year. The NFL's all-time leader in touchdown catches and yards, Gronkowski has a robust following in part because he is a self-deprecating, easygoing guy with a big heart. At the NFL Draft, when the Patriots were asked which player they would take with the No. 6 pick, Gronkowski responded, "I don't know. It's kinda hard to pick a tight end. They all look the same." Gronkowski was very much a cult hero in New England, and football fans were getting up in arms when the Patriots selected Oregon's Dion Jordan instead. Then came Super Bowl LI. Gronkowski did his best work there. He was the Patriots' top receiver, catching nine passes for 131 yards and two touchdowns. The lead changed seven times in the Super Bowl, and it wasn't until the Patriots had the ball with two minutes left that Bill Belichick decided to send out Gronkowski as a receiver. He caught a 31-yard pass from Tom Brady, and the Patriots won. After Super Bowl LI, many thought Gronkowski would have to give up football. He has managed to return, and it's been a great story. But one part of Gronkowski's story is unfinished. ESPN.com's James Walker and the Boston Globe's Ben Volin report that Gronkowski may be retiring after this season: 520fdb1ae7
