. . When it was recorded, the South African R&B/soul singer Kabelo Mabalane, who performed the song, released a version with Malawi lyrics on his album Moselna (1996). Style and recognition In terms of sound, the song has many influences . . . There is the usual jazz feel . . . There is the influence of Ali, 'I Want To Be Free' and Sam Cooke, 'Ask The Lonely' . . . It has a very fast pace . . . The hook line, 'I want to be free, I want to be free, I want to be free' . . . Just like the other songs that sound like this . . . It is a song that takes a journey."
