Project management tracking tools excel

If you're managing a pile of projects and you're the only project working on a project, the large list of features in most business-focused project management applications is overwhelming and unnecessary. So we wonder: what tools do you use to manage your personal projects? Photo: VizzZual.com.12 If you don't need a scalable communication tool for a group of projects, share tasks, and don't need to assign them to others, it can be difficult to find the perfect project management tool. Many managers are packed to the rafters with features focused on managing projects in the context of many different groups of workers to make them unwieldy for individuals to use. This week we'll love to hear all about your favorite just-right-one-on-one project management tools. Hive Five nominations take place in the comments, where you're posting your favorite tools. We get hundreds of comments, so to make your nomination clear, so please include it at the top of your comments: Vote: The Best Personal Project Management Tool. Don't include votes in replies to other commenters. Instead, vote and reply to separate comments. If you do not follow this format, we may not count your votes. To avoid manipulating the results, the votes in the first comment may not be counted. After you make your nomination, let us know why it makes you stand out from the competition. About Hive Five: The Hive Five feature series asks readers to answer the questions we ask most often. Once a week we will put a call on competitors looking for the best solution to a particular problem, and you will tell us your favorite tool to get the job done. Every weekend, we re-report the top five recommendations and give you the opportunity to vote for what works best for you. For example, check out last week's 5 best book recommendation services. A closer look makes it easy to find project management tools for large groups, but finding a project for personal use that is not overwhelmed by group-centric features is a challenge. Here are five popular tools for managing personal projects: The spread of the hive five this week has reached extensively. The answer to the question What is the best personal project management tool is, of course, very diverse and personal. We count votes, and in some cases fold very similar tools to combined items, and now we look at your favorite personal project management tools. This list is now a bit old and we do not recommend the tools on this page for personal project management. For a more updated list of great tools, check out the latest Hive 5 on the same topic. When The to-do list becomes a monster, and the items next to the checkbox will actually take a long time... Read moreTodoist (web-based, free) This image lost some time after posting. Todoist is a full functional to-do and project management tool suitable for personal project management. You can easily sort tasks into projects and sub-projects, manage tasks within a project with additional sub-lists, and assign due dates to any date. Todoist has lost time after publishing by integrating with Gmail for easy movement between email inboxes and project management inboxes.mGSD (web-based, free). Formerly known as MonkeyGTD, mGSD is a powerful personal care tool based on TiddlyWiki. Whether or not you're working on David Allen's completion system, mGSD in particular is packed with features for managing projects in the GTD style. You can easily flag input as part of a new task or an existing project, send it as an epilepsy file for future reminders, or hide it as a reference. You can store mGSD on a remote web server (or Dropbox account) for remote access, or keep files local for easy transfer from a flash drive. G/O Media lost a fee of $19Tom's Planner (web-based, free) some time after this image was published. If Gantt charts are a big part of your workflow and project planning, Tom's Planner is an intuitive Gantt charting tool that works well as a personal project management tool. Unlike most traditional Gantt charts, which display data after typing elsewhere, Tom's Planner focuses on ease of use, including instant, mouse-based adjustments of charts. From here, you need to take it for a test run and pay special attention to the functioning of the mouse button. Things (Mac, $49.95) lost some time after this image was posted. Things is a to-do and project management tool dedicated to Mac OS X and iOS. The interface is easy to navigate, rich in keyboard shortcuts and very well integrated into the core applications of Mac such as iCal. It's easy to move tasks, organize them into projects, and connect to calendars. All adjustments in the main app are easily synced with iPhone, iPad and other iOS devices. OneNote/Evernote/Text This image has been lost for some time after it was published. It was a neck-and-neck battle between OneNote, Evernote and basic text capture. With key roles like note-writing and organizing tools, and the proliferation of different personalities of voting this week, we've been able to roll together as one item through freedom. OneNote is a Windows-specific product that comes with Microsoft Office, which typically provides good project management through the pages and sub-pages that come with your notebook. Evernote is a web and mobile device-based capture. And a personal project manager of choice for many people. If you already use Evernote to capture all your life input, it's relatively easy to use to manage your project and organize related tasks and materials. Finally, a significant number of readers managed every project using basic text documents, avoiding all bells and whistles of cool tools like OneNote and Evernote. Now that you have the opportunity to take a look at the top contenders for the best personal project management tools, it's time to vote for your favorite people: share what your personal project manager has overlooked. Let's hear about it in the comments. Do you have a good idea for the next Hive Five? tips@lifehacker.com your email and we will do our best to get your ideas into the limelight it's worth it. Read more We are doing something different with the call for competitors this week. To vote, follow these guidelines: Follow this format for voting, including bold. If you don't, it won't count: screenshots of your favorite tools or logos [preferably 970x546] Vote: [Personal Project Management Tool] Why: Explain why you love this app or service above all else. Check your case! Try to keep it in one paragraph, maybe two. Tell us why you saved time, how much it costs to use it, and why others suggest you try it. Do not duplicate. Instead, if someone nominates your favorite candidate, star (featured) give it a boost and reply to them instead. If someone has beaten you to the punch, don't leave another comment with the same nomination. Click on the stars to recommend them and bump the numbers next to the stars one by one. It's important that we use the numbers next to those stars to aggregate the nominees and determine the top five! Non-entries in this post, do not leave direct comments. They're just going to get pushed down. Save feedback on someone else's submission. If you're not sure what we mean, check out the writers' nominees below. We will give you a head start, they should all be in the proper format, so you can follow our lead. The Hive Five series asks readers to answer the questions we ask most often. Every week we put calls for the best tools, apps or services, then look back at the top 5 weekends with a chance for you to vote your best. Only nominations made using the above format are counted. To prevent tampering, the nomination of the first comment may not be counted, the final five are based on your nomination and our recommendations for the best.
