From Bulbapedia, a community encyclopedia of Pokemon. The two mews present different appearances depending on their gender, as seen from the anime Pyroar gender differences in anime, with a man and a woman respectively, some species of Pokemon have differences in appearance due to gender in the Pokemon world, with noticeable differences between men and women. With the exception of differences between male and female nidor (which are considered to be separate species), gender differences have been introduced into Generation IV. These differences are a reference to sexual dimorphism, which is usually observed in many real forms of life and may offer some clues to their biology and behavior. At Pokemon Diamond, Pearl and Platinum, at the gates in Canalave City, Professor Rowan's assistant upgrades the player's Pokemon to be able to display differences in form, including gender differences. In subsequent games, they are displayed from the beginning. Later generations would have introduced far fewer Pokemon with gender differences, but those that were introduced varied much more dramatically in appearance. The two Pokemon, Miasotic and Indeezee, even have different abilities and learn different moves through alignment, TMs and reproduction depending on their gender. Men and women even have different statistics. However, most Pokemon look the same despite their gender. The male has a green lower part, and the female has a brown lower part. The 592 Frillish Male is blue, frowns, and has a ruffled collar, smooth, diamond patterned tentacles, and one upper lash on the eye. The female is pink, smiles, has an onion collar, ruffled tentacles, and one lower lash on the eye. Males have a star-shaped head pattern and a stiff crown, while females have a floral pattern and a limping crown. 593 Jellicent Body color, eyes, head pattern, and tentacles differences in much the same way as with Frillish, but a woman's eyes are now larger and have two eyelashes each. Males have a facial coating resembling a large moustache, while females have one resembling a fluffy collar. The female has a mouth in the shape of a heart, and the male is hidden inside the mustache. Generation VI - The name Male Female Difference 668 Pyroar Male has a large mana in the shape of a kanji character (big or large), a more stocky body and semi-brown front legs. The female has long, flowing hair, similar to a ponytail and mostly brown legs. The male tail has a split. 678 meus males are mostly blue with white glare, reverse females. Male eyes are green with light blue sclera, while women's eyes are red and yellow. Unlike most Pokemon, moves can vary depending on gender, with men learning more status moves and women learning more attack moves. Male meutists have the hidden abilities of a prankster, while female meuthists have hidden competitive abilities. Generation VIII - The name Male Difference 876 Indeezee Men lowered their eyes, a triangular mouth pointing upwards as a frown, and more black on the torso, made to resemble a suit. Females have wider eyes, a triangular mouth pointing down like a smile, and a more white on the torso, made to resemble an apron. Men Indeezee have more attack, special attack, and speed, while women indeezee have more defense, special defense and HP. The two sexes also have different moves. Trivia Garchomp is the only pseudo-legendary Pokemon that has gender differences. The fairy is the only type that lacks Pokemon with gender differences. Generation IV introduced the most Pokemon with gender differences, a total of 31. It was also generation that has introduced gender evolution. Conversely, Generation VIII has introduced several Pokemon with gender generational differences that introduce sex-sex Pokemon Only one. Generation VII is the only generation that has not introduced Pokemon that have gender differences. However, he introduced Pokemon, which can only develop if it is a specific gender (only a female Salandit can develop in Salazzle) and a new gender distinction for Eevee, which was exclusive to the player partner Eevee. No Mega Evolution, Gigantamax forms, or regional forms have gender differences, even if other forms of the same species do. Despite very noticeable gender differences, Hippopotas and Hippowdon are the only works of art and a sprite menu for the male version. Despite the absence of any gender differences, Rotom Pok'dex will display separate models for men and women Spinda. Some Pokemon with gender differences can turn into Pokemon that have no gender differences. Examples include Darkness turning into Bellossom and Gligar turning into Gilscoor.
