John Petrucci il mio idolo praticamente da quando ho scoperto il mondo dei virtuosi. The didattica la studiavo già da ragazzo, soprattutto nella part video. Il book risulta molto complete, tratta argomenti di varia natura che porteranno tutti i chitarristi a migliorare di molto la coordinazione delle mani, l'indipendenza delle dita, la velocit. Approfondiranno anche tecniche molto diffuse nel Virtuosity. Consigliatissima a tutti i chitarristi di livello intermedio interessati a fare il salto di qualità nella technical parrot. My guitar compi (which also runs around in this forum) told me that Petrucci has a book that is usually the fucking rooster (which is like a kind of bible for guitarists), but we have no idea of several things: 1- We play guitar for a short time or will this book serve us more advanced people? 2- Will it be translated into Spanish? 3- Title of the book, publisher (to order it) and price more or less. Thank you very much. A P.D. greeting: If this book doesn't work for newcomers, I'd appreciate it if you recommend one for learning and practicing. If it's called Discipline Skirt, or at least the most famous, you may have some more. I recommend it, but it's still pure technique, remember. A good book, yes, but it only talks about technology. John Petrucci - Rock Discipline Image not available It can be used for some stretches and warming, but if you start, you wouldn't understand some concepts that explained and even at a slow speed you'll have a hard time, but if you want, you can follow it. I have it as a headbook... Greetings... Rock discipline is in book and DVD version, you would get better, so you can see more clearly the techniques it recommends and how to practice them, even this other book that has good exercises, each of us is highly recommended... sr_1_4/102-6491044-7224938?ie=UTF8&s=books&qid=1188456375&sr=1-4 good because it's easy, search for the DVD and download the Guitar pro file that goes through the entire rock discipline, and there's also a PDF of Spanish translations and that was it. Metzelder, if you can't find that, send me a private one. the book fits well with some things of technique, but you need to finish with some other instructions, I also recommend some of Troy Stetina. Luck. And in Spanish, is there something out there? I nothing, although I don't think there are a lot of things, right? Or? And in Spanish is there anything out there? I don't control anything, even though I don't think there are a lot of things, right? the other time, if you download the subtitles of the SPANISH DVD here in the forum, I just can't find the post if someone can happen it or the same thing and search it, if you find it, if you put it down, and that's fine. I just can't touch what's in this three-handed video... At the moment I give the tutorials of the download page of this forum, but I want to read a book of those who bring with cd/DVD to see how it must sound what they put. better get it out of the mule so you can put the replacements Efectiviguonder 2 comments John Petrucci - Rock Discipline SPANISH subtitles!!!! They are popular for sales, marketing, technology and academic positions. If you have been asked to deliver one during your interview, prepare to form a strong case as a candidate. A general is already But selling yourself is always the hardest thing. Spectacular references and outstanding expertise don't count for much if you can't clearly represent them, and that's what you expect during your interview presentation. So let's set you up for the challenge. This post is action packed with job interview PowerPoint presentation examples and will give you the best way to do a presentation without stressing about too much! What should an interview presentation look like? Think of your interview presentation as a sales pitch. Your goal is to convince the staff that you are the best candidate for the job. The kick here is that you will present to a warm audience – you have already impressed them enough with your CV to be called up for an interview. Employers request interview presentations for simple reasons: to evaluate your communication and public knowledge. To understand if you are the right cultural fit for the company. To create a better sense of how well you are savvy in the domain. So your first task is to make sure that your presentation meets the criteria. Check the company's job description again and note all candidate requirements. Take the time to read about their corporate values and mission. In general, be proactive and ask exactly what you should cover during your presentation. Most interview presentations differ in content and style, but here's a brief example to give you more context:[Use this template]How to prepare a presentation for an interview: The basics Before you get an elbow deep when designing this PowerPoint presentation for your job interview, do scouting and contact the HR team with a few questions. You want your presentation to be on-site and technically correct, so ask your contact as follows: How long should an interview presentation be? 15 minutes is the golden standard, although some employers may ask to reduce it to just 10 minutes or extend it to 20-25. A conversation presentation would certainly be welcome by your colleagues and a team leader, but it may seem too casual for the senior managers or the board. Does the HR team have a specific agenda in mind? Ask some leading questions to understand what kind of skills/experience you want to demonstrate. What is the IT setup? Should you bring your own laptop? Do you need an adapter to connect to the projector? What kind of presentation software do they have – PowerPoint, Keynote, Google Slides? Define your structure Everyone appreciates clarity. In fact, 89% of professionals say that their ability to communicate with clarity has a direct impact on their careers and income. Your presentation should flow, not rumble. Make sure your story is easy to follow, and it's easy to digest, remember, and share your core message. If you want people to keep, keep, for the next structure:Source: This infographic was created with 3 steps editable 3D conductor infographic Here is an interview presentation example that is styled in this way. What is, the company's presence in the Middle East is low. Only 15% of sales come from the top markets. Why this is important: The UAE fashion market alone is expected to grow by 21% of CAGR over the next five years. What could be: I helped my former employer open a flagship store in Dubai, have many industry contacts, and am familiar with the local legislature. Your brand can expect sales to grow by 17% within one year of opening. In this article, you'll find even more ideas for designing your presentations. Which slides to include The selection of slides largely depends on whether you are asked to talk about yourself or whether you are presenting a task that you need to do as part of your work (e.B create marketing campaigns). Most interview presentation templates include the next slides:Opening SlideQuick Bio/Personal SummaryCareer PathEducation timelineKey Skills and ExpertiseCase Studies/Examples of the issues you solved in your previous jobs Your vision for your future role. What exactly you can bring in as a candidate (we will circle to this one again later!) Can't figure out where to start? Swipe one of the following interview presentation examples:How to Come Up With 15-Minute Interview Presentation Ideas Typically, a talent acquisition team will suggest some general interview presentation topics. For example, if you apply for a sales line, you may be prompted to develop a sales presentation for a product (real or imaginary). Some employers will request a brief presentation about you or your hobbies to understand if you are a good fit for the team and share the values of the company. No matter what theme you're given, your audience will rate your suitability for the role. In fact, the interviewers at this point don't care so much about your experience and skills. You want to know how to use them to solve the company's pressing problems – meeting revenue targets, improving roi from social media marketing, or helping them generate more revenue. Your job is to make an educated guess... and predict which problem is the most painful and set up your magic pill during your interview presentation. I know what you think – but how do I find the right opportunity/problem to address? Companies from different industries have the same Challenges related to one of the following areas: Your topic should clearly address one of these areas and provide a potential roadmap for solving a specific problem in it. Suppose you are applying for a sales role. Of course, you will want to address the customer audience a number of problems. To refine your idea, ask yourself the following: Are you thinking of a new customer segment that should appeal to the company? Who are they, what do they want and how can you help the company reach them? Do you have a network or experience to identify and place new customers? Can you imagine new opportunities for cooperation that the company could use to attract a whole new niche of customers? So a sample interview presentation about yourself should include a set of problem and solution slides that show exactly how you're going to address this issue when the company hires you. Here's another PowerPoint presentation about yourself for a one-application interview sample that's worth using —integrate a case study slide that shows how you successfully solved a similar problem for your former employer. How to complete your interview presentation? Complete your presentation by explaining the company's key steps. Provide an estimate of how much time it will take to address the issue, what changes/investments should be made. Your conclusion should say: Hire me and I will solve this problem for you in no time! How to prepare for an interview: The latest tipsSource:StockSnapDial-Up Your PowerTake take a deep breath and strike a power pose before entering the room. Stand with your feet and hands on your hips, or with your arms going up in a 'V.', or sit down with your legs in front of yourself, feet on the desk or a table, sit back, with your hands on the back of your head, fingers intertwined, and elbows, recommends Amy Cuddy, a bestselling author, social physiologist and TED spokeswoman. According to their research, the power posers performed better in interviews and were more likely to be hired. Another study also proved this theory: ignorant judges gave the power-focused candidates the great preference. So yes, Pep talks work! The first 30 seconds count Most of what you do and say in the first 30 seconds will have the greatest effect. Psychological research shows that listeners form opinions about your personality and intelligence in the first 30 seconds of the interview. So be sure to start with a convincing opening and frame it exactly as you want to be perceived. Try To Appear Similar to the InterviewerLauren Rivera, a professor at Kellogg School, concluded that interviewers tend to hire people like her. Even the top human resources management people fall for this bias and tend to base their ratings on how similar a candidate is to them, rather than trying to decide whether skills of the person are ideal for the position. To be liked, you need to be relatable. Back up your statements with factsTo deliver a presentation with a bang, you can use pre-analyzed facts to support your hypothesis. Make sure you do your homework, study the company and its competitive landscape, and do the professional work you would have done as a member of the company's crew. At some point Your interview presentation, go out of the script, pull out a series of documents to support their statements. Source: StockSnapFor example, you can give away a quick plan that shows a number of things that the employer could do today to save money even if he doesn't hire you. Be careful to be meticulous, your work will speak for you. But giving this work away shows the employer your commitment, your skills and your concentration. And that's exactly how you highlight your interview presentation. Most candidates are just swaying about their skills and past career moves. They bring specificity and proof to the plate and show exactly what makes you a great rental fair and space. Your Final Act Stop fretting and start preparing for your interview presentation. You now have all the tricky presentation tips to eat the interview.
