Reading Free Books Online Home is the Most Popular Of the Covenants (111) - - - My thanks to readers are first and foremost readers of The Handmaid's Tale: their interest and curiosity has been inspiring. And a big thank you to the great team that brought the book to life as an exciting, beautifully made, and award-winning MGM and Hulu television series: Steve Stark, Warren Littlefield, and Daniel Wilson at the production end; showrunner Bruce Miller and his excellent writing room; Excellent directors; and an amazing cast for which it was definitely not just another show: Elisabeth Moss, Ann Dowd, Samira Wiley, Joseph Fiennes, Yvonne Strahovski, Alexis Bledel, Amanda Bruegel, Max Minghella, and many others. The television series respects one of the axioms of the novel: it does not allow any event that has no precedent in the history of mankind. Each published book is a group effort, so thank you very much because of the wild squad of editors and the first readers on both sides of the Atlantic who helped with this thought experiment in countless ways, from I love it! You can't get away with this! whatever I don't understand, tell me more. This group includes, but is not limited to, Becky Hardy Chutto/Penguin Random House UK; Louise Dennis and Martha Cagna-Fortner of Penguin Random House Canada; Nan Taleese and LouAnn Walter of Penguin Random House USA; Jess Atwood Gibson, who is ruthless; and Heather Sangster of Strong Finish, a demon copywriter editor who chooses every nit, including those who are still unhatched. And thanks to a proofreader and production team led by Lydia Buchler and Lorraine Hyland at Penguin Random House USA and Kimberly Hesas at Penguin Random House Canada. Thanks also Todd Doughty and Suzanne Hertz Penguin Random House USA; Jared Bland and Ashley Dunn at Penguin Random House Canada; and Fran Owen, Marie Yamazaki and Chloe Healy of Penguin Random House U.K. My now retired agents, Phoebe Larmore and Vivienne Schuster; Caroline Sutton and Caitlin Leydon, Claire Nozieres, Sophie Baker and Jodie Fabbri from Curtis Brown; Alex Fan, David Sabel and Fane Productions; and Ron Bernstein of ICM. In the special services department: Scott Griffin for sailing advice; Oberon Sell Ravenhart and Kirsten Johnsen; Mia Smith, whose name appears in the text as a result of an auction in aid of the charity Freedom from Torture; and a few world war resistance from France, Poland and the Netherlands, whom I have known for many years. Hell's character was named after my marriage aunt, Ada Bauer Atwood Brannen, who was one of the first female hunting and fishing guides in Nova Scotia. For those who keep me trundling in time, and who reminds me what day it is, including Lucia Cinema of O.W. Toad Limited and Penny Cavanaugh; W.D. Bauer, who designs and looks after the website; Ruth Atwood and Evelyn Heskin; and Mike Stoyan and Sheldon Scheub, Donald Bennett, Bob Clark and Dave

Cole. For Colin quinn, who ensures that I get out of writing to Burrow and on the open road; Xiaolan zhao and Vicky Dong; Matthew Gibson, who fixes things; and Terry Carman and shock doctors, to keep the lights on. And as always, Graham Gibson, my partner in many strange and wonderful adventures for almost fifty years. About AUTHOR Margaret Atwood, whose work has been published in more than forty-five countries, is the author of more than fifty books of fiction, poetry and critical essays, as well as graphic novels. With the Covenants, the wait was over. Margaret Atwood's sequel raises the story fifteen years after Offred stepped into the unknown, with the explosive wills of three female storytellers from Gilead. Dear Readers: Everything you've ever asked me about Gilead and his inner workings is the inspiration for this book. Well, almost all of them! Another inspiration is the world we lived in. -Margaret Atwood Download The Covenants of Margaret Atwood PDF novel for free. I'm already petrified. This statue was a small token of appreciation for my great contribution, said the quote that was read out by Aunt Vidal. She was tasked by our superiors, and was far from grateful. I thanked her with as much modesty as I could summon, and then pulled out a rope that released a cloth draping enveloping me; he heaved to the ground, and there I stood. We're not cheering here in the Ardua Hall, but there were some cautious claps. I bowed my head in a nod. My statue is larger than life as a statue, usually, and shows me how younger, slimmer, and in better shape than I have been for some time. I stand straight, shoulders back, my lips curved in a firm but friendly smile. My eyes are fixed on some cosmic point of reference, which is understood to represent my idealism, my unwavering commitment to duty, my determination to move forward despite all obstacles. Not that anything in the sky would be visible to my statue, placed as it is in a sullen cluster of trees and shrubs next to the footpath running in front of the Ardua hall. We, the aunts, should not be too presumptuous, even in stone. Clutching her left hand, a girl of seven or eight looks at me with trusting eyes. My right hand rests on the head of a woman crouched on my side, her hair veiled, her eyes turned upside down in a expression that can be read as either craven or of our maids, and behind me is one of my mother-of-pearl girls ready to come to their missionary work. Hanging from my waist is my Taser. This weapon reminds me of my shortcomings: if I were more effective, I would not need such a tool. Persuasion in my voice would be enough. As a group of sculptures it is not a great success: too crowded. I'd rather focus on myself. But at least I look sane. It could have been otherwise, as the elderly sculptor - a true believer from the time of the deceased - had a tendency to give bulging eyes to her subjects as a sign of their pious fervor. Her bust of Elena's aunt looks frantic, with Aunt Vidal's hyperthyroid, and Aunt Elizabeth seems ready to explode. At the opening, the sculptor was nervous. Was her performance flattering me enough? Did I approve of it? Will I be considered to endorse? I toyed with the idea of frowning as the leaf came down, but thought better: I'm not without compassion. Very realistic, I said. Since then, my statue has withstood: pigeons decorated me, moss sprouted in my dampening clefts. Votaries took to leaving offerings on my feet: eggs for fertility, redness to suggest pregnancy fullness, croissants with reference to the moon. I ignore breadcrumbs, usually they were raining, but pocket oranges. Oranges are so refreshing. The question - I write these words in my private sanctuary in the Ardua Hall Library - one of the few libraries left after the enthusiastic burning of books that takes place all over our land. The corrupt and bloodied fingerprints of the past must be destroyed to create a clean space for a morally pure generation that is surely about to arrive. That's the theory. But among these bloody fingerprints are those made by us and they can't be destroyed so easily. Over the years I have buried many bones; Now I tend to dig them again, if only for your edification, my unknown reader. If you read, this manuscript at least survived. Although I may be fantasizing: maybe I'll never have a reader. Maybe I'll only talk to the wall, in more ways than one. That's enough for today. My arm hurts, my back hurts, and I'm waiting for a night cup of hot milk. I'll stash this screed in his stash, avoiding surveillance cameras- I know where they are by placing them myself. Despite such precautions, I am aware of the risk that I run: writing can be dangerous. What betrayals, and then what denunciations, can be safe for me? There are a few in the Ardua Hall who would like to get their hands on these pages. Wait, I advise them in silence: it will be even worse.
