"No you can't open that door. You'd better step back." "Don't you touch me!" the pilot bellows as he punches the female cop.

"Guess what I'm going to do," she taunts, as he wrestles with her. The plane is still flying, but the cop has to pay for her insolence, and is stuck in an airplane with the hijacker. The cop soon discovers that he is being forced to write her a love poem, and she is the recipient of said poem. When he finishes writing her the poem, the cop realizes that it is in a different language than the rest of the cabin. The hijacker notices this too, and taunts the cop by calling him a "Fookin' Aussie", and telling him

"You can write your own letters." "I want to make one thing clear: I am sick and tired of women being pushed around and getting nothing but excuses," an exasperated Jennifer Lopez stated on the red carpet. "I don't know if this is a comment on male arrogance or lack of respect for women, but I think it's a problem." Anyone who's ever been turned down by the "wrong" guy or girl can sympathize with the actress. Lopez is the "It Girl" in a crowded, celebrity-rich entertainment world. Yet she has been forced to suffer through a string of chump boyfriends and ex-husbands, including her first husband, whom she divorced in 1994. She dated actors Ben Affleck, Charlie Sheen and Cameron Diaz over the years before settling down with Marc Anthony.

Weighing in at about 6 feet tall, Lopez is commonly described as possessing a voluptuous figure. After a long line of action stars, in 1999 Lopez stepped into a rare straight acting role as a schizophrenic woman in the film "Down in the Valley." It was a major career change. Still, Lopez is determined to make her mark on television and as a producer, not just as an actress. She is set to star as executive producer of the new television series "The Man Show," an all-male remake of the popular "Sex and the City" show. She is intent on keeping her new image clean. "I feel like I'm being true to myself and who I am as an actress," she said. "I'm a mother, first. I don't want to confuse
