

Fairly Exhaustive Slow-Carb Food List

The food list Tim Ferriss has in The 4-Hour Body is not very long. The trouble with it is that you get a lot of well-meaning people errantly thinking you can't eat anything outside of that list, and as a result people get bored with the foods.

I did a lot of research on different foods to see how big the list could really be. Below you'll see a chart of over 100 food items that are totally approved for consumption on the slow-carb diet. To make a meal, pick something from each column (the "Extras" column is optional), and throw it on a plate! It could be as extravagant or simple as you'd like.

Notes:

* These foods are technically slow-carb friendly, but they're better for maintenance than fat loss. If you're eating them and finding it difficult to lose fat, remove them and see if that helps.

 These foods are technically OK but are very easy to overdo. They should be limited to small snacks only. For the Extra's column, those are only condiments and shouldn't be used in excessive amounts. (I'm looking at you, hummus!)
