Gathering is a fun past time, and for some of us, a bit of obsession. But how do you know what your treasures are worth? One of the best ways is to browse the list of price guides, and we have a few you will definitely want to check out. It is always important to note that with all antiques and collectibles, the value is subjective. If it is not the actual sale price of the auction, the values given for any item are often the opinion of the author or appraiser. The bottom line is that it only takes two people to establish the true value: seller and buyer! Scott Olson/Staff/Getty Images rock 'n' roll is one of the most figures in entertaining memorabilia. Everything from LP covers to Elvis's hair ended up in the auction block after his death and can fetch quite a penny. Elvis mania extends to all parts of his life. For example, did you know that a 1974 prescription pill bottle for antibiotics sold for almost $4,000 in 2010? Rodin Eckenroth/Contributor/Getty Images We often hear about collecting wheat cereal boxes with sports icons, but it may surprise you that other cereals are valuable. Many of the best have famous figures, but we don't talk about thousands or even hundreds in most cases - dollars here. While your 1991 undiscovered Michael Jordan Withey can only fetch $20, a box of Kellogg Sugar Pops once sold for $161. Perhaps one of the hottest collectibles, the balls are really fun to collect and they don't take up much space. One wouldn't think that these tiny glass balls can hold great value, but you'd be surprised that some of them are sold. For example, a rare four-panel bow ball in near-perfect condition sold in 2009 for an astonishing $2,632. It's a great value for something that's not quite two inches around. The beauty and cunning of marble can really add to the cost. However, like most antiques, rare items tend to sell at the highest price. De Agostini Picture Library/Getty Images Toys of all eras, styles and materials are very collectible, some larger than others. Among the hottest tin toys on the market, and they too can fit into any niche collection. From ocean liners to Noah's Ark, to antique tin toys by specific manufacturers, there are toys available to every collector. Chris Connor/Contributor/Getty Images Many collectors prefer to focus on advertising. Not only is it a fascinating step back in time for iconic brands, but it's also a small look at modern history. Alternatively, you can coordinate your collection for any interest you have. Peanuts' planters recognisable Mr. Peanuts is one of the best names in collectible advertising. There are so many fun things available with this character - from money banks to baby rattles that it can be an endless desire for a collector. Antique tools are another common flea market to find. Corn crushers, tack hammers, boot nests, and nails are just some of the tools that you'll come through in garbage piles. Other tools that are not necessary for a farm or handyman shop are also collectibles. The weirder or rarer she is, the more intrigue she has. For example, Campbell-Stokes' solar recorder looks like a microscope, but measures the sun. One of these scientific instruments sold for $1,950 at auction. Joan Goncalves/EyeEm/Getty Images available advertising, few are the mass appeal of vintage cookie cans. They are hilarious, whimsical and filled with character, making them wonderful conversation pieces. And Aunt Jemima and quaker oats came up with some some neat projects over the years. If you can find one of them, consider yourself happy. Mint Images/Getty Images Right there with cookie jars, teapots fun kitchen collectibles. From classically styled antique teapots to adorable novelties, this endless and entertaining niche to get into. Teapots can be found in the form of Disney characters, animals, phones and many cultures, from European to Asian. DigiPub/Getty Images Shortly after they went out of fashion, these aluminum Christmas trees seemed bright and bright, but they came back. It may surprise you that some of these shiny, can't be missed decorations sell for hundreds of dollars. Whether it's gold or silver, aluminum trees put a vintage flair into the holiday season. That's why people love them! Just be careful because as they age, they can become more fragile and you may lose luster. Jimss/Getty Images Sad irons are an old style of iron clothing that is heated on a stove or near a campfire. Despite the diminutive size, they are very heavy and many of them do not have wooden or heat-resistant handles so women often burn their hands. It is one of the most collectible iron styles on the market. They range in size and style, from fancy to strictly utilitarian, and they are fun to hunt down at flea markets.
