The powerful anti-corruption crusader Viktor Orban has opened fire on the European Parliament for not criticising the populist strongman of neighbouring Hungary more forcefully over the country's blatantly undemocratic laws that have stripped more than 200,000 citizens of their voting rights and effectively disenfranchised them for life. "It's an outrage that in a place where democracy is supposed to be protected, democracy is a dead letter," Mr Orban told a conference of European conservative parties in Budapest, where he said the anti-migrant and anti-European Union laws that have sparked the worst refugee crisis in decades were "the fault of the European Parliament". "There are no people to rescue us from Brussels, but they can at least save Europe from us," he said. "It's time to say: enough with the self-flagellation. It's time to stand up for European values." The speech comes just hours after the European Parliament overwhelmingly agreed to support a text with the toughest sanctions ever imposed on Hungary for its constitutional reforms which give Prime Minister Viktor Orban's Fidesz party more power to rewrite Hungary's constitution.
