HOLDERS OF BLACK and DECKER SHARES have had something to smile about over the past year. Up 28% since Barron's Online recommended the power-tool behemoth last September (see Weekday Trader, Black and Decker's Stock Still Has Juice, September 6, 2006), the stock bucked concerns about home sales and consumers amid strong overseas sales, share buybacks and recent takeover speculation pairing Black and General Electric. However, investors may now want to lock in some profits and avoid getting hammered. The U.S. housing market will take much longer to recover than many originally expected. Cashless homeowners are postponing renovation projects, while orders from retailers can take a hit. And investors, takeaways from GE or any other company may be disappointed. Over the next 18 months, the environment surrounding most of black and Decker's final markets looks weak, says Alex Ropers, president of Atlantic Investment Management, a New York hedge fund. Power tools will be sold, but the question is how many of them. The home improvement market looks soft. I don't see much of the story. income in the near future. Others agree. Last week, Merrill Lynch downgraded the stock to neutral from Buy. In June, Soleil Securities Group initiated coverage in Hold. And in May, Banc of America Securities initiated a sales rating. We see major headwinds until 2008, writes analyst Daniel Oppenheim. Founded in 1910, Black and Decker is the world's largest manufacturer of power tools, controlling about one-fifth of the global market at a cost of $17 billion. The company sells household appliances, equipment and home goods such as plumbing and door locks. But in 2006, energy tools received 74% of sales. Unfortunately, times are difficult for the housing and housing industries. Last week, Home Depot, Black and Decker's biggest customers, cut estimates for 2007, in part because the U.S. housing downturn deepened. Less than 20 percent of Black and Decker's revenue is related to the construction of a new home in the U.S., said Roger A. Young, a spokesman for the company. A third of sales are generated overseas, and industrial and commercial construction generates another 10% to 15%, providing some insulation from falling home sales. But 40% of Black and Decker's sales are related to home renovations and repairs and consumer spending, both facing huge challenges. Americans feel less safe about spending money on their homes and have less home equity to tap. Remodeling projects are expected to fall by 6% this year and 14% in 2008, according to Banc America. We recognize that people don't want to spend on their homes in this environment, says Black and Decker Young. But then again, the renovation and redevelopment of the market should not be anywhere near as volatile as the new home begins, which could fall by 15% this year. U.S. home sales in 2007 will fall to their lowest level since the housing boom began in 1991, according to Freddie Mac projections. And the stock of new homes remains unsold. Estimates of income for 2007 have been reduced since September. Wall Street now expects earnings to fall for the second year in a row to $6.51 per share. According to Thomson Financial. I like the company, but there is cause for concern about the home building industry, says Frank James, chief investment officer at James Investment Research. Other businesses will end up for a part of it, but can't cover it all. Shares of Black and Decker began selling off in early June before takeover speculation fueled a 7% one-day gain on July 12. Black and Decker's low debt and hefty cash flow make it an attractive takeover target. The media cited General Electric as a potential bidder. Both companies declined to comment. But at a conference last week, GE Chief Executive Jeffrey Immelt assured analysts that he doesn't expect any significant acquisitions this year. Meanwhile, Oppenheim America's Banc says for leveraged buyout to generate adequate returns for investors -- say 20% -- stock Black and Decker are falling significantly. Today, a 20% premium will bring the stock more 113 per share, or 17.4 projected earnings over the next four quarters and a 9% premium to the broader market. At $94.49, Black and Dekker shares traded at 14.5 times forward profit, compared to five-year median median 12.3 times, according to Thomson Financial. The shares are moving to an even bigger premium - 81% - to the company's projected long-term growth rate. Rivals Masco, Stanley Works and American Standard are changing hands at higher multiples. And at current prices, I don't think we're overvalued, says Young. An unexpected turnaround in the housing market could send stocks soaring again. Earlier this year, Black and Decker expanded their share buyback plan and raised dividends for the fourth year in a row. This is the company's top driver. It should not trade discounts to the broader market, said Marvin Roffman, chairman of Roffman Miller Associates. However, with more than half of its sales linked to consumer spending, the U.S. housing market and home renovations and renovations, Black and Decker are facing obstacles. And investors may want to look elsewhere to create their portfolios. The full disclosure of Soleil Securities Group has a retention rating on Black and Decker. Banc of America Securities and/or one of its affiliates have had an investment banking relationship with Black and Decker for the past 12 months, and the firm expects to receive or intend to seek an investment banking business from Black and Decker within the next three months, according to a research note. Banc America has a sales rating in stock. Merrill Lynch has a neutral rating on Black and Dekker. Roffman Miller Associates held 84,000 shares of Black and Decker as of July 4, 2007, according to Marvin

Roffman, chairman of the firm. According to James Investment Research, as of March 31, 2007, James Investment Research owned 2,935 shares of Black StreetSight.net. Atlantic Investment Management does not own Black and Decker shares as of March 31, 2007, according to Alex Ropers, the firm's president. Comments? Cheryl Brooksville, FL Verified Reviewer Original Review: February 9, 2020I purchased a toaster oven about 3 years ago. The first one had an unconvincing door hinge. I called the BSB and complained. After a bunch of absurd questions (i.e. how much and when it is used), they sent me a replacement. Replacement doesn't last long. The device made a low whistling sound when it first The timer stopped working before the food was done. The toast was burned. I found an old BDD TRO 200 model with a lever switch (best option) in almost mint condition in the thrift store. I've never had a problem with old models. They're Them seriously exhaust all these complaints. Exploding glass and bonfires should not be part of the performance of a toaster oven! Rachel Auburn, WA Verified Reviewer Original Review: July 27, 2019 I bought a Black and Decker toaster oven less than 2 months ago. This morning I put a piece of toast in it and I turned around to grab a cup of coffee and I smelled smoke. I opened the toaster oven and my piece of toast was on fire. There was so much smoke that I had to open all my doors and windows and my smoke alarm started to go away. I turned off the toaster oven and threw the water over the bread. I brought it back to Walmart and they gave me their money back and I bought another toaster oven. It is very dangerous and I do not recommend anyone to buy a black and Decker toaster oven. I've had a lot of toaster stoves over the years, they functioned very well. It was a very terrifying experience as a fire could have caused more damage outside the toaster oven. SUSAN Syracuse, UT Verified Reviewer Original Review: May 7, 2019 Just threw my Toaster Oven in the rain - it was on fire!! I was in my office and the toaster dinged when it finished. Ten minutes later I walked in and it's on fire! I turned it off and threw it outside on my lawn. I think about how many times my 13-year-old has used this. We had problems with that oven. It's scary and should be withdrawn! I can't believe how many of them have the same question and nothing has been done. Patricia Delton, FL Verified Reviewer Original review: April 16, 2019 I bought a convection toaster oven, and when I opened it only 1 rack and baking pan was too big. It doesn't fit. It was a black Model Decker TO4304SS. This clearly shows on the box that it should have 2 racks. Other than that, it seems to work. See how it goes as I bought it today at BJ's Wholesale.Dianne from Uxbridge, MA Verified Reviewer Original Review: April 15, 2019 I came home to find my Black and Decker toaster stove with no house to turn it on. I haven't used a toaster oven in 3 weeks, but the oven was on full blast behind the heated it seems. I had a mail that was on fire. Terrifying.Pam Parksville, B.C. Verified Reviewer Original Review: March 21, 2019 This product was obviously designed by someone who has never made a piece of toast in their life. No matter how little time the dial is turned on, it burns everything. The rack positions ensure that at least one side will not toast or will burn because it is not possible to strut the toasted element in the middle. And now I see from other reviews the glass can explode. And their complaint website doesn't allow anything to be submitted - the perfect way to get no complaints. Lester Staten Island, NY Verified Reviewer Original review: December 4, 2018Nas Black and Decker convexed a countertop oven exploded in my kitchen tonight. I never will. Another POS Black and Decker product product Black and Decker have known about the problem for years, but continue to sell them. They are in prison. Deb Waukee, IA Verified Reviewer Original Review: November 17, 2018I sit here in my living room with a distinct smell of electric fire, because 20 minutes ago my year my year black Friday special Black and Decker toaster oven just burns in flames. He wasn't dirty. I'm cleaning this thing up. Oh, my God, stay away from this brand! I used a toaster oven often and bought a new one every few years just for an upgrade and I never had one catch fire. No plans to buy Black and Decker again. Tara of New York, NY Verified Reviewer Original review: June 19, 2018 We have had our toaster oven probably no more than two years. Today I was toasting pumpkin seeds and went to another room while they toasted. About two minutes later, I heard a loud explosion as something exploded - a glass door from a toaster blown out, Hollywood style, with pieces no bigger than thumbtack everywhere. Shocked, I quickly turned off the toaster and waited for the glass to cool down before I could even start to pick it up. I keep thinking that if it had been two minutes early, I would have been sprayed with hot glass and maybe even in the emergency room. It's unreal that there are so many cases like mine here that stretch to three years and nothing has been done. Diane Hartsdale, NY Verified Reviewer Original Review: November 28, 2017I turned on the toaster stove, left the room and about a minute later I heard a loud pop, returned to find the glass smashed all over the kitchen. I was very grateful that no one was in the kitchen. I see similar questions and I'm confused as to why there was no review!
