After a lackluster week at the movies, it is a delight to find something that would leave you feeling and thinking as only great films can. I'm a stickler for good stories in movies. In my early days I was a huge comic book fan, and I could easily follow all kinds of stories. But I don't find anything compelling in overly complicated stories. There is a difference between a good and a great story. The latter gives you an experience like no other. When I watch a great film, I can imagine myself in it. Every emotion and situation strikes me. The way a scene is set up, the style of acting, the writing, the acting, the music, the editing and so on, seem to create a mood and create an experience that is unique to that film. The viewer is given a different experience each time he/she sees it. The reason I love great movies so much is because they take me to places where I am often times happy and sad, irritated and amazed, angry and mystified. These movies are like going to a place where I get to explore different sides of my personality, a movie that leaves me thinking, and leaves me with a feeling. But I guess the bottom line is that I love them for their creativity. How do you tell if a movie is great? Ask yourself if you can imagine yourself in the story. If the answer is yes, then you have a great story. I want to talk about five great movies that I recently saw. I think you will find the answers to these questions in each one. This is a fantastic movie about brotherhood and friendship. What I love about this movie is the way we come to know about each other's lives. We come to know their dreams and problems through conversations on the road. This movie has very little dialogue, and more of a narrative. You have to be open to the journey, which is what makes it great. I really like the way the story is told, how it is set up, and how we go with the journey. This is the story of four best friends who live together in a house. Each one of them has a story of his own, which helps
