Brad Pitt's latest profile is full of bombshells about his divorce, quit drinking, and his match method. But don't let it distract you from the decisive revelation. Pitt, who swears he's not going through a midlife crisis, no longer wants to be called Brad. When writer Michael Paterniti Ge asks Pitt if he considers himself successful, the actor (though he doesn't think of himself as much an actor, either) simply replies: I would just change my name. SEE ALSO: Brad Pitt's role in the movie takes its vitality as husband How. Diddy. Can I be Puffy Now or-What is Snoop? Lion? I just felt that Brad was wrong,' Pitt declares. And now I just feel like Brad. Pitt, who is so Brad, quickly clarifies that rebranding according to the aforementioned rappers is not exactly what he is looking for. Instead of another name he would prefer to go for Nothing. Now, embracing the void is very cool. But there are so many options for quotes in the profile that only a dude named Brad Pitt would say: I get up every morning and I do fire. When I go to bed, I do fire, just because-it makes me feel life. I just feel life in this house. Good luck fighting the Bradness burden, man. Brad Pitt has been doing his rounds in Hollywood since the 90s, although he got his start on the small screen over a decade ago. But being a big player in Tinseltown wasn't on his mind when he was a kid. Maybe it's not all that weird, given the big dreams kids often have - astronaut, doctor, lawyer... Pitt's ideal work as a child was not something as glamorous as a typical childhood dream or a career he eventually called his own. Is Brad Pitt still active in Hollywood? Brad Pitt(En) Axelle/Bauer-Griffin/FilmMagic At one point, it felt like Pitt was on the big screen nonstop. He was a cult actor in quite a few unforgettable films, including Oceans Eleven and Fight Club. Most recently, he found himself cast in the newest Quentin Tarantino film, Once Upon a Time in Hollywood, where he stars along with another fan of fave, Leonardo DiCaprio. It's not the only movie he has on his plate, though. Pitt plays the main character in Ad Astra, which just dropped last month. The film casts a 55-year-old superstar in the role of an astronaut who goes into space in search of his father and answers questions that may well affect the entire human population. Both films look promising, but it could be the end of Pitt's long career. According to Page Six, Pitt said there just isn't much room in the industry for older actors. I really believe that overall it's a young man's game - not that there are no significant parts for older characters - I just feel the game itself, it will move on naturally. There will be a natural to him all. - Brad Pitt The good news is that he has no plans to disappear from the entertainment industry completely. Instead, you will hopefully be able to catch his name in the credits for more behind-the-scenes work. What jobs did Brad Pitt have before he became an actor? Like many Hollywood stars, Pitt was a member of the infamous rat race like the Rest of Us before he landed the role that put him on the map. So what did this college dropout decide to tackle by pursuing his Tinseltown dreams? Delivery of refrigerators. You're reading this right. Mr and Mrs Smith drop off these large household kitchen appliances even on the hottest days. Not exactly a career, but a concert that will at least help cover the rent. While the work on delivering the appliances was not very glamorous, Pitt had another side vanity that would be the envy of men around the world. He was transporting strippers to concerts in a limousine. However, the delivery work is only with a completely different type of cargo. From there, he rocked one of those giant chicken mascot costumes to help attract customers to El Pollo Loco. The method of action he did in the suit, while nothing to brag about, probably helped bolster Pitt for roles he would eventually get one by one. What did Brad Pitt want to be when he grew up? During the Ellen DeGeneres Show, Pitt interviewed young reporter Jayden Jefferson. Jefferson asked that question. When Pitt was 11, what did he want to do with his life? After a moment of reflection, Pitt got his answer. He wanted to be a builder. Jefferson pushed Pitt a little further. He asked what attracted him to the role. According to Pitt, it was a very natural desire. He always knew how the houses and rooms affected him. If they influenced him, they also influenced others. It was the idea that the space you built could really have an impact on the lives of other people who attracted it to building as a job. Not to mention the fact that the general idea of building and creating things with his own hands was something for him that stood out. Definitely an interesting choice for a man who has become one of Hollywood's biggest stars. Part of being a father is now a great kid and it sounds like Brad Pitt is that part of it all is sewn up! Despite being in the entertainment industry for decades, there are some things that fans may not know about Once upon a time in Hollywood and Ad Astra stars. Here are 10 facts, even the biggest Brad Pitt fan may not know. Before you were actor, Brad Pitt was a driver for strippers. Tim. Whitby/Getty Images Before making it big in Hollywood, Pitt had some casual jobs, from dressing up in a chicken suit to fast food chain El Pollo Loco to being driver for strippers for two months. My job is to take them to stag parties and stuff, he said during an Oscar-winning roundtable interview for Newsweek. Pitt said he would raise money, play bad Prince tapes, and catch girls' clothes. It wasn't a healthy atmosphere, he said. However, the novelty disappeared very quickly, and it got very, very depressing. Pitt said that one of the women was in the acting class taught by Roy London, and he decided to see what he could learn. It was a really important time for me as far as the direction,' he added. Is there a biceps on his right? Why seems to be a mysterious new tattoo of humanoid silhouette and its shadow... But what does that mean? The black design itself depicts a tall skinny man standing over what appears to be his smaller shadow, Us Weekly explained, about the new tattoo. Could this be Benjamin Button's Link? Oh, my God, I hope so! The magazine further justifies its hunch, saying that one of the posters of the film had the same concept, but with an elderly man. Now, of course, we have our own guesses here in Cut regarding the significance of Brad Pitt's new tattoo - Man looking at his shadow thinking, How does the shadow get made? Something with the sun, or... ? I mean. Ok. Yes, I think it should be the sun, now that I think about it. Or actually I think it could be any light if it's behind you. Or in front of you! - the man whose best friend is his own shadow. :(But actually its shadow is fun to be around and it's not sad. Link to Fiona Apple's song Shadow Boxer. - It's just a guy thinking: Damn... - a link to the Wikipedia Analysis page for Hans Christian Andersen's story Shadow, which looks like this: Shadow is an exemplary story in Andersen's dark fairy tales. Throughout the tale, the writer is portrayed as a moral man preoccupied with the good and truth of the world. But, as they say, the people around him are not very interested in his feelings on this subject. In fact, his shadow says he doesn't see the world for what it really is. Shadow claims to have seen everything in the world, but does not own the soul of himself. He strongly wants to own a shadow of himself, and later asks his former owner to change roles in their trip. When the scientist finally realizes how far his shadow has degraded, it is too late. The ending is particularly grim for a fairy tale, as Andersen suggests that it is not always a good thing that triumphs, and that evil does have a powerful power over the good and the simple. Yikes! Just what he saw and wanted as a tattoo. Obviously, they're all inferior to Benjamin Button's rumor, which, indeed, we're spreading right now.
