What the consumer needs to considerTo day there are many different kinds of TVs, including LCD, LED, plasma, DLP and rear projection. The technologies built into these sets are much more sophisticated than the old-fashioned tv tube image and, as a result, cost considerably more. Therefore, we can no longer treat these sets as one-time. I work hard to repair rather than replace worn printed circuit boards to make repair costs reasonable and therefore practical.. This is a valid issue because although the average cost of repairing the TV $60-$90, you can have a fix that costs hundreds! But don't worry, even a job that costs you a few hundred will cost you a lot more your time and money compared to buying a new TV right off the bat. But first we need to get the biggest problem out of the way, and that's to check if your screen is broken. If so, you'll need to replace the entire TV screen. At this point, it may be more worth your money to buy a new TV. But don't be hastily, it all depends on the size of the screen, as well as the price of a new TV that you might think of getting. Be sure to call us to make an appointment so we can let you know how much it will cost to fix the TV. Then do research on a new TV you could buy. But be realistic, it doesn't shoot high for a TV you can't afford. If a new TV is cheaper than the cost of replacing the screen, then go ahead and buy a new TV. If it's still more expensive than replacing the screen, then make an appointment with us to fix the TV and we'll make it. On the cheaper side of the spectrum, you can have broken bulbs. This can happen if you use the TV a lot, especially if you have a habit of falling asleep with the TV. If that's the case, then you should expect to pay anywhere from $60 to around $100 to replace the light bulb, depending on your TV. It's also a quick TV repair, so you won't have to wait long for your TV to work again. And somewhere in the middle we have other different video and audio issues that you could have with your TV. However, the best way to find out what kind of problem you have is to get an experienced specialist to diagnose the problem. Call us to get the TV repaired and we'll send you someone as soon as possible. Possible.
