BROADBANDNOW is a comparison and search site that does not offer internet, TV or home phone service. © 2014 - 2020 BroadbandNow | BroadbandNow is a registered trademark of Centerfield BBN LLC As a world famous destination for tourism, entertainment and business, Las Vegas has broadband needs that are different from other cities of similar size. Residents, visitors and entrepreneurs rely on stable high-speed internet access to get things done. That means internet providers in Las Vegas have a great job to do! What types of Internet service providers are in Las Vegas? Most Las Vegas residents and businesses still use one of two types of technology - cable broadband and DSL - although gigabit fiber internet is now available in much of the city. Both cable and DSL are widely available, and the growing fiber network now covers most of Las Vegas, with relatively dense coverage from north to south, although there are still neighborhoods that fall outside the fiber network. Most residents have three or more options when it comes to internet providers in Las Vegas. For some people who live well outside the city or in deprived neighborhoods, satellite broadband, fixed telephony and cellular broadband may be the most reliable options they have. Which Internet providers in Las Vegas serve the most people? Cox Communications (which offers cable and TV broadband service) and CenturyLink (which offers fiber, DSL, wireless, telephone and TV service) provide the highest coverage in Las Vegas. Rise Broadband (formerly JAB) is the internet provider in Las Vegas with the third largest coverage footprint. There are also smaller internet providers in Las Vegas serving commercial and residential customers. How much do Internet service providers charge in Las Vegas? The prices charged by internet providers in Las Vegas for broadband packages tend to be similar to the cost of broadband in urban centers around the United States. Fiber internet is the most expensive type of broadband delivery, and many people find they are satisfied with a slightly slower but much less expensive cable or DSL package. Many ISPs offer budget plans, although some do not advertise these plans for bare bones and finding them may require doing some digging. Are data caps common among Las Vegas Internet providers? Many of the broadband internet providers in Las Vegas sell plans with data limits. In 2017, Cox instituted data caps in Nevada as part of a new strategy to manage network traffic. Around the same time, CenturyLink abandoned pilot data limit programs and chose to continue its existing overuse policy that flags accounts using large amounts of data. LV is one of the few providers that unlimited data without excess or throttling fees. What do I need to know when I'm researching Las Vegas internet providers? The most important considerations will be availability, speed and price. Take the opportunity to look carefully not only at what internet providers in Las Vegas are advertising, but also what people are saying about the service they provide. You can read reviews online and ask friends and neighbors about their experiences, but you should also look at unbiased sources like BroadbandSearch for detailed information on how each internet provider accumulates. Are internet providers in my area my only options? People and businesses in the heart of Las Vegas will have some options when choosing a broadband provider. However, it's important to be in mind that PROVIDERS will advertise in areas they don't really serve, so just because you see an ad doesn't mean you can get what's promised in that ad in your neighborhood. Don't forget that satellite internet is available almost anywhere, and today's satellite broadband speeds are actually comparable to those of most cable and DSL services.
