Using the word in English conversation is basically like describing some Japanese comic book series or animated movie or show from Japan. For example, a Japanese person would think Sailor Moon and Disney's Frozen are both anime, not two different things from different genres. Pokemon Co. Real Japanese pronunciation anime is a-ni-me with a sounds a in art (albeit a little shorter), ni sounds like ni Nick, and I'm called like I met. However, the way natural English speakers speak anime is a little different when a sounds like an a in ant, ni sounds like Nick's ni (the same as Japanese), and when I say like a month, May. While most Western anime fans are aware of their incorrect pronunciation, most prefer to stick to it because it is easier to say and because it is the most commonly used pronunciation (outside Japan).
