Andrew scheer platform pdf

OTTAWA - The Conservative Party has released its 2019 cost platform outlining how the Andrew Scheer-led government will return to balanced budgets with more planned cuts than promised spending. In a campaign that is now approaching the finish line - the Conservatives have rolled out a number of promises, many of them new affordability-oriented tax cuts and credits. Today, the party offered details on how it would return the federal budget to balance by 2024-25: spending less than it would accumulate in income and savings through cuts. Sign up for our Ballot Dispatch newsletter for a daily update of the Campaign Platform titled: Andrew Scheer's Plan for You to Get Ahead covers 103 pages and includes chapters on jobs, climate change, and a wide section covering called More Home Care, which outlines the Conservatives' plan for ethics, immigration, firearms, health care, privacy, veterans and more. The package comes a day after the final debate of campaign leaders, and with 10 days to go until all ballots are cast. It combines Scheer's already announced election commitments, as well as offering new information on the party's future position on other topics. Although already announced, the Conservatives say they are committed to balancing the budget within five years. Current projections from the party show that the fifth year of the budget will show a $667 million surplus. The Parliamentary Budget Officer is currently pegging the deficit to $23.3 billion in 2020-21 without taking into account any party's promises. In total, the Conservatives estimate that the promises they have made, or the policies they will adopt if elected, will cost $6.2 billion in 2020-21, but will also bring in just over $6.4 billion in new revenue or savings, bringing the PBO deficit, estimated by PBO, to $23 billion. The Liberals predict the deficit will be 27.4 billion in 2020-21, the NDP says under their plan it will hit $32.7 billion a year alone, and neither side has a plan or timeline to get back to balance. The new Conservative government will live within its means, the platform says. In supporting documents provided to the party to journalists, the Conservatives preferred to present potential scenarios with family types as examples of how much each family would save through a combination of measures within the platform to which they are entitled. Some of the big ticket items in the Conservative platform are: Implementing universal tax cuts that will lower the income tax rate below $47,630, which will cost $548 million in 2020-21, but more than in folds the following year, reaching $5.9 billion by the end of the conservative first mandate; Removing GST from House energy bills that Conservative Conservatives will save the average household in Canada $100 in 2020. This will cost $1.3 billion in 2020-21, and about the same amount every year in the future; Creating the Green Home Repair Tax Credit, a 20 percent refund for eco-friendly home improvements that will cost $894 million in 2020-21, and $687 million in its second and final year; and make maternity and parental benefits tax-free by removing federal income tax from EI maternity and EI parental benefits in the form of a tax credit. This is estimated to cost $616 million in 2020-21 and gradually grow over time. Scheer unveiled a document that was provided to the media in advance, from Delta, B.C. This election will come to a choice between a government that thinks they can spend their money better than you, raises taxes, and makes your life more inaccessible - and a new Conservative government that will lower your taxes and put more money in your pocket, Scheer writes in this platform, next to a photo of the leader backed by a number of Canadian flags. As in the Liberal paper, the Conservative platform is bombarded with pictures of the leader at the hustle and bustle. The party says that in the final days of this campaign Scheer will outline what the new Conservative government will do in his first 100 days in office if he is elected. Scheer faced questions throughout the campaign about when the price of his package of promises would be made public. He has previously signaled that voters will have plenty of time to make a decision before they vote. Earlier today, Liberal leader Justin Trudeau took aim before the document went public, saying that you don't release your best job at 6 o'clock on a long weekend Friday. What the Conservatives will cut under this vow to return to black is something the Conservatives say is needed to protect social programs such as education and health care-she's led by the government will table legislation requiring the federal government to maintain a balanced budget each year once the current deficit is eliminated. We will tie the salaries of the Prime Minister and ministers to the implementation of a balanced budget, the statement said. The Conservatives will also put in place what they call pay as you go rule for all new spending, meaning for every spending offer, there should be equal savings to make up for it. How the Conservatives plan to return to balance, though not under the first mandate, in particular through the following cuts: cutting $1.5 billion a year by considering business subsidy programs, citing the $12 million that went to Loblaws under the Liberals for new high-efficiency refrigerators as an example; Elimination of the emissions tax Liberals, which will save $222 million in 2020-21, though that amount will decrease over time; Priority Priority spending that will eliminate $1.3 billion in 2020-21 and billions more over time, while keeping infrastructure projects underway, and adding other projects in British Columbia, Ontario and quebec, albeit with a delay of 15 years instead of the promised Liberals 12. The $1.5 billion reduction in foreign aid and the cancellation of the planned increase in international assistance to save another $400 million in the first year have declined slightly over time; The introduction of a three per cent tax - the same amount imposed by liberals - on the incomes of large technology firms that provide a social media platform, search engine or online marketplace. This new big technology tax will apply to companies with global revenue of more than $1 billion and Canadian revenue of $50 million. By analysing the tax gap, redistributing $750 million to the ACA to combat tax evasion, the PBO estimates it could raise $3.37 billion by 2024-25; and a $823 million increase in operating costs for the public service in 2020-21, but they will increase by a billion dollars over the next few years. The Conservatives say public service staffing will remain in place in 2020-2021 until the budget is balanced, but cuts will be made on spending such as consultants, travel and hospitality, as well as at conferences attended by public servants. The Conservatives also say they will gradually reduce the footprint of public estate. Plans aimed at jobs, families, seniors, homeowners the first two parts of the conservative platform focuses on their plans for work, families and homeowners. This includes measures such as: Introducing 15 weeks of leave for employment insurance and other support for foster parents, which the platform simply says has a small cost, not the actual number; Allowing first-time homebuyers to take out a 30-year mortgage, and removing the stress test for renewal, none of which are said to cost the government anything; The return of two Harper-era boutique tax credits: the Children's Fitness Tax Credit and the Children's Arts and Learning Tax Credit. The cost, combined in 2020-21, is $297 million; Raising the government's contribution to the registered education savings plan by 10 percent for every dollar parents put in, up to $2,500 a year. The measure is projected to cost $56 million in the first year of its implementation, which is scheduled for 2021-22; Expanding the $1,000 age loan to help low- and middle-income seniors is estimated to be worth $553 million in 2020-21 and is growing gradually over time; and the repeal of liberal changes small businesses are involved in revenue spraying and passive income, which will cost $500 million in 2020-21, and will also grow every year. Conservatives also promise new support for famers, famers, and remove existing interprovincial trade barriers. The Conservatives' innovative environmental approach to the climate plan came out in June, billed as Canada's best chance to meet the Paris goals without a carbon tax, but the proposals don't have any estimates of how successful this list of policies will be on reducing greenhouse gas emissions. On Friday's platform, policy proposals aimed at supporting innovation in green technology and environmental protection include spending on various aspects: a 15 percent tax credit for public transport, called the green public transport tax credit, which is estimated to cost $227 million in 2020-21, which will increase slightly over time; The plan is to force large-scale polluters to reinvest in clean energy technology, instead of paying fines to the government, which the Conservatives call green investment standards, but essentially the price of pollution for large issuers. It will cost $8 million a year. Launching a Green Expansion Accelerator to provide funds to industries that have been proven to reduce emissions in other countries, costing $500 million in 2020-21, which will cost the most out of the three years the program will run; and the launch of a Canadian clean brand in which conservatives will stamp Canadian products as such, marketing them as the cleanest in the world for global customers. It will cost a total of $20 million in the first two years. The Conservative platform also promises to repeal Bill C-69, controversial environmental regulation legislation passed by the Liberals, build the Trans Mountain Pipeline, appoint a minister to consult with indigenous rights holders, create a national energy corridor and end the north coast shipping ban on B.C. prison reform, punishing for breaching conflicts of interest after centralizing much of its criticism of the Liberal government's legal and ethical scandals , The Conservative platform offers several suggestions on how they would manage differently. Among those promises is to impose real penalties for violating the Conflict of Interest Act, which Trudeau was found to have done twice but received no financial or administrative punishment. The Conservatives will amend the legislation to reverse the burden of proof for whistleblowers and file it for employers, as well as extend protections for those working on government contracts in the private sector. Public servants who come forward to do the right thing and disclose wrongdoing in the interests of Canadians should not for their job security or face intimidation from their employers, the platform says. The Conservative government will also close a loophole in the Conflict of Interest Act, which allows cabinet members to indirectly indirectly the move in light of the controversies that surrounded Finance Minister Bill Morneau in the last parliament. As already announced, the Conservatives will allow the RCMP to access documents deemed to be the trust of the Cabinet and launch a judicial investigation into the SNC-Lavalin scandal, which will amount to $20 million after it is completed within two years. The platform also says the Conservatives will increase oversight powers over ethics and lobbying commissioners, tighten lobbying restrictions for people who have been criminally charged and implement a proposal by former interim Conservative leader Ron Ambrose to make it mandatory that all judges in Canada enact sexual assault law training. The party platform also offers several fixes, gangs, human trafficking, drugs and justice-related promises. These include the binding of parole eligibility for training; under legislation allowing judges to lock up the worst offenders for the rest of their lives; termination of official release; End of an unnamed day passes from prison; ending the prison needle exchange programme because needles are dangerous weapons that endanger correctional officers; requiring a full-body scan for anyone who goes to jail; and a change in the Penal Code to identify gangs and toughen penalties for violent gang-related crimes. On the Conservatives' domestic agenda, the Conservative Platform also outlines the party's position on a wide range of internal files. Among the cost items spend $25 million a year to make admission for free to Canada's national museums, for Canadians and foreign tourists; and the replacement of MRI and CT machines costing $250 million in 2020-21. The Conservatives say they will also extend the EI to parents whose baby dies; develop an autism strategy; Solve cyberbullying Priorities of genocide survivors, LGBT refugees and internally displaced persons as refugees, as well as the immigration department's hiring backgrounds of new arrivals to the needs of companies that rely on temporary foreign workers. Indigenous-focused commitments span just two pages, and conservatives say they will remove barriers to prosperity; To modernize the governance of indigenous peoples; keep up with the Liberals' plan to clean up drinking water with reserve recommendations; and develop a plan of action for missing and murdered indigenous women and girls. Foreign policy, terrorism Scheer also spent considerable time chiding Trudeau on his record on international relations. On this platform, he promises to restore Canada's role while making big overtures to India and Scheer will reopen the religious freedoms office, worth $1 million, and move the Canadian Embassy in Israel to Jerusalem, which will cost $2 million in total. The Conservative government will also allow CSIS to thwart terrorist terrorist and enact new laws that will prosecute Canadians who travel to designated terrorist hotspots while introducing new protections for their children. As for military procurement, Scheer's plan will see the CF-18s replaced, the navy's second temporary supply ship purchased, and submarines replaced.
