Submit an order, a $20 fee, and a school form, if necessary, to the Driver's License Examiner. When you're convicted drunk driving in Tennessee, you will automatically have your driver's license revoked or suspended. This will significantly change your lifestyle, making it difficult to get to work or school, go to the doctor or even the grocery store, and otherwise drastically affect your daily routine. Fortunately, for most people convicted of driving under the influence, there is the possibility of obtaining a limited license in Tennessee. There are two types of limited licenses: (1) Limited license with geographic restrictions and (2) Limited license with ignition blocking device. In both cases, the judge must approve the issuance of a limited license and you must comply with the state's requirements to qualify. Eligibility for dui limited licenses in the Tennessee state of Tennessee will not be considered a qualifying for a limited license if you have ever been convicted of a dui murder or have previous convictions for either a car attack or aggravated car homicide. If your DUI violation resulted in serious bodily harm or death of another person, you will also not be considered eligible for a limited license in Tennessee. While a limited license with geographic limitations is cheaper and perhaps less embarrassing, a person is only eligible for this type of license in very limited cases. In most cases and in most cases, a person convicted of drink-driving will only be entitled to a limited license which restricts driving to a vehicle with an ignition locking device. If the court has ordered that your driving is limited to a vehicle or vehicles with ignition blocking devices, make sure that the device was installed before applying for a dui hardship license. The ignition locking device is a breath analyzer that prevents the person who drank alcohol from starting and driving the vehicle. The device also requires taking breath samples randomly while the vehicle is being driven. How to Get a DUI Hardship License in Tennessee? To apply for a limited-value dui license in Tennessee, you must first apply for a certified order signed by a judge in the court where you were convicted of driving under the influence or in the district where you reside. You will also need to obtain an SR-22 insurance certificate from your vehicle insurer to prove that your policy is in effect. The state of Tennessee requires a $65 license fee as well as a $2.00 fee for the Suffering License procedure. Within 10 days of receiving it, you must submit your original certified court order along with a copy of it to your local driver service center. You may also be asked to pass a driving license exam. Where can I drive with a Tennessee DUI Hardship License? If you are granted a limited DUI license with geographical restrictions from the State of Tennessee, you will have Drive to and from the following places: Your current place of employment your campus if you are currently enrolled in higher education appointments with a probation officer appointment for blocking device monitoring services Outpatient programs for drug and alcohol treatment religious services or weight in your house of worship In contrast, there are no restrictions on where or when you can drive if dui limited licenses requiring ignition blocking devices are granted. This reason alone often convinces those convicted of drink driving to choose this option. More importantly, if the circumstances of a PODI driving offence fall within a very narrow exception that would allow a judge to grant a limited license with geographical limitations, a person convicted of driving under the influence of alcohol must operate a vehicle with a spark lock for 365 days before becoming eligible for renewal of the license, regardless of whether they decide to obtain a limited license.
