When are peonies in season uk

Images by Rebecca Goddard Photography. If you missed the first installment of this three-part floral series, then it's a must-read and you can find it here. I urge you to take a look if you want to learn all about wedding flower budgets! It's a revealing piece and one I wish I'd read when planning my own floral story. Jay Archer is the author of this series and is beyond the incredible in many ways. Honest, creative and a little magic, I had the pleasure of working with this lady at Pynes House last month at our last publishing house and it was a joy to witness this floral genius in action. What Jay doesn't know about flowers probably isn't worth knowing! But what's worth knowing is today's fleshy theme: seasonality. What do the seasons really mean for florists and how will this influence your choice as a bride...? Read on to find out, oh, and don't forget to pin the relevant season markers so you can return on a later planning date. Jay: Seasonal does not mean adult or local Britons, nor does it mean cheaper. That's the biggest misconception when it comes to wedding flowers -- all the flowers I guess. Using the season simply means something is in 'season' - it's the best now. Roses grown in English, for example, are at their best from June to September, while peonies thrive in May in early July. You can get most of the off-season flowers today; Norway grows and stores peonies in the snow, but they definitely won't look your best! These flowers will be of lower quality and probably won't smell so beautiful. It's like Christmas strawberries that are often grown in Peru or Spain - they cost more and just don't taste like a sweet, sticky, delicious strawberry, so why would you..?! Being smart with your budget means you can see pennies and have seasonal products at the same time. If you like roses but can't afford to use them throughout your scheme (at 3 euros per stem and up to 5 euros for David Austin's), then consider using them only in your bridal bouquet. Before you see your florist, you need to find out what's important to you. Write a list of your must-haves and pleasures, work with the seasons and make sure your floral ideas are free for your natural environment and choice of wedding venue. Being clear about your budget will mean that your florist will recommend the right flowers for you. British flowers are usually sold in smaller wrappers or individual stems, so if your florist doesn't use British grown then this could mean they'll buy their flowers in bulk. Imports can come in wrappers of up to 50, per ranuncululus and anemones are always sold in large quantities, so this will have an impact on your budget as you will have to pay for the full wrappers instead of just one or two stems. Buying flowers in bulk can cost When in season -- spring bulbs, autumn foliage, corn/scabious flowers, winter branches and amaryllis are good bag-friendly options. So talk to your florist and make sure you're armed with all the questions you want to ask. So what's in the season when..? Spring Ah, Spring -- the most scented month! Think pale blue spears and white muscari ice, multi-tonal almost pearly hellebore and small scented bells nodding with the lily head of the valley! This particular specimen is one of the most desirable wedding flowers and available all year round from a guy in Holland at about 2 pounds per stem! Also in spring: Flower -- apple, quince, cherry, magnolia, prunus, spirea and others. Tulips -- French tulips are a real pleasure, with their long stems and peach heads. Parrot tulips and English tulips are available in every color you can imagine! Wallflowers -- available from local growers only usually. Its petals have the most incredible color variations that remind me of a Turner sky! Ranunculus -- peonies are not yet so ranunculus are the next best thing and beautiful in their own right. Anemones -- the much-desired variety of marine eyes are more expensive than their white-centric counterparts. I think white people are pure and classic. Narcissi and paper whites -- The scent of these little flowery fireworks is an amazing thing! Strong and intoxicating, they can be overwhelming when used in centerpieces, but they are good for bouquets. Forget about the me-nos -- delicate little dots of sky blue. Dream. Fritillarios -- beautiful little dark purple nod heads with a boxed pattern. Working on a palette of pastel roses, creamy whites, dark vintage roses and soft blues, I suggest mixing spring flowers with catkins, branches and senecio foliage. Summer Peony Season! For which everyone goes crazy! Summer is bright, bold and energetic, a lot of people get married in outdoor ceremonies and canopies so think about color. White flowers look great in the day, but may not appear in your photographs at all. Using a beet base, birch and hazelnut think jewel shades of roses, deep midnight blue and oranges. Delphiniums and roses are at their best now, along with: Stocks -- scented spears of lilac, purple, pink, fuchsia, white or bare peach. Foxgloves -- now available in peach, blush and violet. Sweet peas -- a classic English garden. Flowering herbs such as mint, rosemary, bay leaf and sage. Mixing these with your arrangements adds to the multisensory experience and frankly, they are delicious. And could you tie up with your cocktails..? Campanula pretty white and lilac bells. Snapdragons -- bright and bold! Do you remember playing with them when they were kids..? Scabious and zinnia -- other garden favorites from the cottage. Using gold or champagne accent colors works well with bold summer tones, or keep it simple quite Glass. In late summer there is hops that are ideal for dressing large spaces, as they come in vines of 3 meters and an average of between 35 and 50 pounds sterling (when the florist has added delivery/labor, etc.)

Autumn Autumn is my absolute favorite season - to be in, to work and create for! It's a great month for color and if you have a budget you can reduce the flowers and use the foliage easily available everywhere. Berries, fruitful branches and dahlias enter their own this time of year and bloom larger head chrysanthemums to die for: Viburnum berry -- a hard blue steely berry, with dark green foliage. Nice eyelets. Blackberries, sloe and apples -- arched, large branches of loaded fruit is luxurious and typically English. Hydrangea -- available throughout the summer, are now at their best, especially the English. In a range of colors, pink and deep reds are always popular with brides and natural foliage is a winner. Roses -- soft English roses have a second color around September/early October and can be great additions to vases and bouquets of buds alike. Spindleberry, albeia and pheasant shrubs - there are some beautiful fruiting and flourishing shrubs around right now. Pumpkins and pumpkins -- what is not to love..?! Working with your florist to create foliage-only screens means you get the best of the season, which is also easy for the bag! Red, gold and copper are all the classic colors of autumn, but you can opt for a modern touch with wine, puce and blush roses with the natural golden tones of dried herbs. Winter customers are often worried that there won't be much right now, but there is! Although not English, most spring flowers are available on the market with ranunculus, anemones and tulips, all firm florist favorites. Amaryllis -- huge and majestic heads of lush velvety in the deepest reds to paler pink. Flowering Viburnum -- berries are also available. White heather -- again, there are some wonderfully unusual shrubs around right now, both English and imported. Euphorbia -- available in peach, salmon, red, pink, orange, yellow and white. Skimmer -- delicate dark red berries with bright dark green leaves. Genista -- scented flower. Wax flower -- a great alternative to gynaeceophilia. Brassica -- ornamental cabbages! Berry hypericum -- winter has to do with texture, and mixing these colorful little pops into bouquets and eyelets works great. Whatever you do in winter, add candles! Heating all those textures with soft candlelight is the way to go. The long tables work well at this time of year and dressing the space with buried moss and chandeliers is a peculiar and original touch. Dark reds and winter whites work well, as this time. Therefore, to recap; Season doesn't always mean cheaper! Whatever the season, there are colors for you -- you can get any color at any time, but working with the season gives you a bigger selection. Watch out for the final part when we return to JAFD Flower School with Katrina Otter Weddings & Hannah Duffy Photography for a place to create bouquets and button holes! A lot of love... When choosing your wedding flowers, it's not just about choosing flowers that complement your choice of wedding dress and overall wedding theme, but it's also important to consider whether they're even available. Here is a list of wedding flowers per season in the UK. While certain flowers such as roses are available throughout the year, most other flowers are only available for months and private seasons. In some cases, however, it is possible to import flowers that are not in season from another region or country. Importing flowers that are not in season in the UK is not possible for all flowers, and can sometimes be an expensive exercise, so it's important to check with your florist to see what your best options are. Sometimes your florist may suggest a flower that is very similar in appearance, but won't cost as much as similar cares. To help you better understand which flowers are available the month of your wedding, here is a list of some of the most popular wedding flowers based on seasonal availability. Wedding flowers seasonal Winter: January Hyacinths, Chrysanthemums, Tulips, Sunflowers, Phalaenopsis Orchids, Cymbidium January Orchids, is in fact one of the coldest months for a wedding and definitely a time for guests to get fat. Hyacinths are flowers that people love to grow in pots and if you are growing some yourself, you can simply cut them fresh just in time for your big day. Chrysanthemums come in large or small flowers and last a long time. Tulips come in all kinds of varieties and colors to match and these flowers are one of the most popular wedding flowers in the UK. A bridal bouquet dotted with white chrysanthemums. Picture: Vanessa Birley Florals Winter: Anemone of February, Delphiniums, Banksia, Bottle Brush, Calla Lilies, Roses, Lila, Lisianthus, Protea, Narcissus Valentine's Day is in February, so, if you are after red roses for your wedding you may need to place your order well in advance! The anemone, sometimes called 'wind flower', is a delicate flower that comes in a variety of colors, cream and classic white. This flower is particularly recognizable by its black center. Delphiniums are tall, sturdy stem-like flowers known for their vibrant shades of blue, purple, violet and pink. Banksia Bottlebrush is a red, fluffy flowering that has a cylindrical shape. It comes from Australia and it's fine because of its exotic appearance. Spring: March Marigolds, Claveles, Lily of the Valley, Queen Anne's Lace, Paphiopedilum Orchids Spring in the UK brings with it an abundance of fresh fresh The marigolds are a bright and warm orange flower that have a wrinkled appearance due to the pale yellow border on the petals. The carnials provide a very classic bridal aesthetic, and similar to hydrangeas, these soft, fluffy white flowers look divine when mixed with fresh white roses. The lily of the valleys are small white flowers that appear as if they have turned upside down. They are delicate and sweet and can look great in a bridal bouquet or even placed on a bridal hairstyle or flower crown. A bridal bouquet with white dens mixed with roses and hydrangeas. Image: Spring Floral Expression: April Carnation Spray, Forget-Me-Nots, Genistas, Oncidium Orchids, Ranunculus The weather is warming, cricketers are in the green and more flowers are blooming. Spray carnations are a smaller version of traditional carnations, and look greatly mixed among other flower varieties. Spray keys also come in many different colors. Forget-Me-Not are small flat flowers known for their soft blue color. Genista makes a wonderful filling with its leafless stems and tiny flower masses. Spring: May Peonies, Agapanthus, Waxflowers, Sweet Williams, Roses, Moluccella, Hydrangeas Parties and fairs are in full swing with summer just around the corner. Flowers are in abundance and many can be used as part of your wedding. Agapanthus is a huge flower, sometimes known as the African lily, and its large impressive flowers are long lasting. The wax flower is ideal for multiple uses, as its small sweet-smelling flowers can be used in fillings and bouquets. Sweet William is an ideal English country garden flower with so many beautiful flowers on each stem. A bridal bouquet made of fresh pink peonies. Picture: Iain & Jo Summer: June Marigolds, Glorious, Iris, Arachnis, Viburnum, Sunflowers, Muscari, Delphiniums, Aster Summer has arrived in the UK, the days are long and you can smell the honeysuckle everywhere. Glorious or the 'Lily Gloria' comes from Africa and is hitting with its petals that are ringed in yellow. Iris has long been a very popular flower although it is important to remember that it has a short lifespan. Red Arachnis in a bridal bouqet. Picture: Hybrid The Flower Company Ltd. Summer: Valley July Lily, Hyacinths, Tulips, Kangaroos Legs, Gypsophila, Nerine, Strelitzias Just as the days are longer and warmer, also the list of wedding flowers available. Tulips are almost never out of season and are certainly never out of fashion. Strelitzias are bright orange and are unique in shape. Its sharp, geometric petals work well in a contemporary-style bouquet. August Cornflowers, Roses, Mint, Prunus, Godetia, Hydrangeas, Phlox, Agapanthus, Bouvardia August is usually the warmest month of the year in Britain, and also the busiest when it comes to wedding season. Brides have a wonderful choice of to choose from in August. The cornflower flowers have a fairly large head and are a distinctive blue color. Roses are always available in many colors, shapes and varieties. Mint may seem like a peculiar choice, but the herb actually makes for a magnificent bouquet filling and has the advantage of its refreshing aroma. Small bouquets made of white hydrangeas. Picture: Autumn Spiral Flowers: September Amaryllis, Aster, Helenium, Achillea, Cattleya Orchids, Eryngium, Spiraea, Vanda, Cosmos Autumn is starting, and fruits and flowers are in abundance. Amaryllis is perfect if you're looking for something dramatic because these big trumpet-shaped flowers really make a statement. Aster also known as the Michaelmas Daisy makes a perfect filling for his bridal bouquet and wedding table. Helenium epitomizes autumn with daisies like flowers that offer the colors of the season. Autumn: October Gladiolus, Freesias, Helleborus, Papaver, Skimmia, Tuberosa, Ornithogalum, Calla Lily Now autumn golds, oranges and browns go out to play. Gladiolus is a traditional flower that is often used to decorate the church or reception site. Freesias are always popular, not only for their delicate female flowers, but their powerful aroma is so attractive. Calla Lily's wedding bouquets. Picture: Sarah Lakin Autumn: November Moluccella, Gomphrena, Solidaster, Triteteia, Veronica, Lisianthus, Amazon Lilies The nights are longer and many flowers have been installed for your winter hibernation. However, there are still many beautiful flowers available in November. Moluccella from across the sea, are the Bells of Ireland and are striking with their masses of flowers resembling the bells. Gomphrena has the advantage of being able to dry easily so if you want dried flowers for decoration or as a filling, the Globe Amaranth is the ideal choice. Solidaster is a soft yellow flower that is very small and is a great bouquet filling. Solidaster is often mistaken for Aster. Winter: December Poinsettias, Hellebores, Winter Camellias, Muscari, Aranthera, Acacia, Phalaenopsis Orchids Winter has officially arrived and of course your wedding will be close to Christmas. But winter flowers are available with Winter Camellias being a perfect example. Poinsettias have beautiful red and green foliage so they are perfect for a Christmas themed wedding. Hellebores come in about 20 varieties and their small colorful flowers are perfect for adding winter tones and texture to your bouquet. Winter Camellias are so named because these evergreen shrubs produce beautiful flowers in the cold weather. They are known for their unique petals, such as paper and robust nature.
