

FROM FARM TO TODDLER

Hello

I'm Danielle, CEO of KC Healthy Kids. We connect early education centers and local farmers to feed young kids locally-grown, healthy food.

You may not know that kids are going hungry because of supply disruptions and parents who lost jobs during the pandemic. Right here in our backyard, food insecurity continues to grow. Having enough food to eat is a human right.

You can help us plant more seeds to feed local kids.

Last year, our organization and area farmers fed families and kids thousands of pounds of fresh produce that was life-saving because of pandemic-related food shortages.

Moving into 2022, we fear we won't be able to get enough fresh food for hungry kids without your help. Our food system is broken. Join us in fixing it by getting more locally grown produce, eggs, bread, and even meat, into our schools.

Learn ways to plant more seeds for our kids' health and futures below.
