Where Land, Sea, and Sky Converge

Cradled between the mountains and the sea, Costa Blanca is one of Europe's most captivating cycling regions. Where sunlit coastal roads, whitewashed villages, and rugged mountain ridges unfold like a painter's canvas. With over 300 days of sunshine each year, mild Mediterranean weather makes it an ideal year-round destination, but in September, the coast settles into a golden rhythm—warm, breezy days and cool, restful nights.

Stretching along Spain's eastern shoreline, the Costa Blanca coastline offers more than 200 kilometers of jaw-dropping seascapes: hidden coves, sweeping beaches, and cliffside roads that skim the edge of the Mediterranean. Inland, the terrain rises into serrated ridgelines and winding ascents, offering both challenge and reward with each climb.

With over 30 categorized climbs, Costa Blanca offers routes for every rider—from rolling coastal rides to alpine-style ascents. The area is home to iconic climbs like the Coll de Rates, Cumbre del Sol, and the towering switchbacks near Guadalest. It's no surprise that Costa Blanca has become one of the top European training bases for UCI WorldTour teams. In the early months of the season, it's common to share the roads with the likes of Ineos Grenadiers, Jumbo-Visma, UAE Team Emirates, and more. But in September, the roads open up just for you—offering a pro-level experience in a setting that feels truly personal.

Whether you're floating through valleys of almond and citrus trees, climbing sun-drenched passes, or pausing in a village café for a cortado and conversation, Costa Blanca invites you to discover Spain beyond the guidebooks. It's a place where the landscape changes with every turn of the pedal, and each vista feels like a personal reward.
