Find sources: Guide Plus - News newspaper book scientist JSTOR (January 2014) (Learn how and when to delete this template message) Guide Plus (in Europe), TV Guide On Screen, TV Guide Daily, TV Guide Plus and Guide Plus (in North America) or G-Guide (in Japan) are the brand names for the interactive electronic program guide (EPG) system that is used in consumer electronics products such as TVs, DVD recorders, personal video recorders, and other video recorders. It offers interactive lists of programs on the screen that allow viewers to navigate, sort, select and schedule television programs to watch and record. Various names are used only for marketing purposes - the whole system belongs to Rovi Corporation, successor to Gemstar-TV Guide International. In 2016, Rovi acquired digital video recorder maker TiVo Inc. and renamed itself TiVo Corporation. In late 2012, Rovi issued a notification to its North American users through Guide Plus, TV Guide On Screen and the Rovi Guide messaging system, which broadcast the service starting in November 2012, and was discontinued gradually until April 2013. The service was discontinued in Europe by the end of 2016. The technical review system was launched in the U.S. and Japan in the mid-1990s and began to be deployed throughout Europe in the 2000s. It is also available for broadcast and cable television in Canada, France, Germany, Spain, UK, Austria, Switzerland, the Netherlands, Belgium and Italy. Companies that produce products that are compatible with the system include those made by Channel Master, Hitachi, JVC, Matsushita/Panasonic, Thomson (RCA, GE and ProScan), Samsung, Sharp, Sony, LG Group and Toshiba. Because the service is supported by the advertiser, updated lists of programs are provided to users free of charge, whether they receive their television signal on air or on cable or satellite television. Gemstar has also released EPG computer software complete with NTSC TV analog tuners made by ATI Technologies, including TV Wonder and All-in-Wonder lines. ATI later, in partnership with TitanTV, provided its ATSC digital maps. The original analog service uses vertical blank interval (VBI) host television stations that have datacast services, similar to how closed subtitles and teletext are broadcast. It can take 24 hours to load on the initial installation because the information is delivered with a low bitrate. TV Digital Service was launched in the United States in 2006 using ATSC digital digital Standard. Although the introduction of digital transmissions significantly improved service, older systems could no longer download lists after the transition of digital television on June 12, 2009. The Program and System Information Protocol (PSIP) used by the ATSC standard allows each television station to send information about its own program lists; in the United States, the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) requires broadcasters to provide programming information on PSIP, but not to cable providers, unless they relay the television station that provides PSIP data. However, the actual implementation is rather scattered and generally minimal; often stations do not provide complete programming descriptions or even display correct information about the program that is currently being aired, much less programming information for the next three hours that are required of them, or guidance information over a 16-day period that can be transmitted. In addition, ATSC tuners are not required to show EPG, only very limited information for the current show on the channel is viewed. While the TV Guide service also requires software installed in a TV or other device, and licensing fees or royalties must be paid by Rovi, it also offers a more complete solution for broadcast television, more like a digital satellite or digital cable.
