Writing an essay is a common task faced by those who study English. Often essays are used as homework, as part of tests, and, of course, as one of the tests for admission to educational institutions.

I found an interesting post, which tells about the types of essays that are used most often, and gives advice on writing such texts. I present to your attention an adapted (and supplemented) Russian version of this material.

What is an essay in English

In English, the essay is one of the genres of written works, which resembles the usual in the post-Soviet space "essay-reasoning". When writing such a text, the author's task is often to convey his opinion and argue it, and in other cases to explore a question in order to give the reader space for his own conclusions.

This imposes a certain imprint on the narrative style. Often it is conducted in the first person of the singular, the text is extensively used connective words, there are emotional vocabulary and metaphors.

There are quite a few essays of different types - in different sources are distinguished from several basic, to ten or more. Today we will talk about the basic types of essays.

Narrative Essays

One of the most popular types of essays. When writing such a text, the author must tell a story based on real life experience. Such stories are usually written in the first person format, and the narrative leads the reader to independent conclusions.

Descriptive Essays

In this case, the main goal is how to draw a picture for the reader with words. Usually the author describes situations, people or objects, laying down a deeper meaning in simple descriptions. Usually such texts affect the emotions of readers, the task is also to bring them to some conclusions based on what they read.

Analytical essays (Expository Essays)

Texts of this type usually include an analysis of a specific topic, which is performed using facts, statistics, references to various studies and reports. That is, here the facts are more important than emotions in a descriptive essay. Therefore, even in the first-person presentation, the author must avoid expressing his own opinion or emotions.

Persuasive Essays

As the title makes clear, the main task of this type of essay is to convince the reader of something, using facts, logic and descriptions of situations related to the topic. In such texts it is good to use expert opinions, practical examples, etc.

As mentioned above, there are much more types of English essays, but these are the main ones. Now, let us proceed to advice on writing texts of these types.

Step #1: formulate an idea

Writing at least a normal text is not as easy as it may seem, but without a predetermined idea the task becomes almost impossible. Therefore, before you start writing, you need to clearly articulate the topic. To do this, you need to define pairs of "thesis-argument".

Thesis is a complete idea that you want to convey to the reader. Usually, the text of an essay should include at least three theses. For example, you want to write an essay on "What is the danger of envy", the thesis may look like this:

- an envious person becomes angry, it is difficult for him to enjoy the success of others, he does not want to help anyone;
- in the modern world of gloss and Instagram it will be difficult for such people to communicate with others, envy provokes isolation and promotes loneliness;
- a jealous person rejoices at the failures of others, he will not seek to counteract injustice.

The thesis can be one, common to the whole text. In support of each thesis, it is necessary to select arguments, that is, facts and examples proving them. Depending on the type of essay, it may be a real life situation, a quote, a reference to the research, etc.
