The previous Next Sort by Voices I was looking for a new laptop to get this Christmas with a certain range of reasonable specifications within my price range (400 pounds) and I originally searched for a laptop with an i5-4210 processor, but instead I find many AMD A8 quad-core processors clocked at about 1.7-1.9 GHz. But I was wondering if this processor would be able to tackle things like 3D animation (which is my usual hobby), video editing, and light-medium games (minecraft in particular), just not all at the same time, of course. Other specifications on laptops that I reviewed along with the AMD A8: at least 4GB of RAM, 500 to 750GB of memory, and AMD Radeon graphics. (Most of what I found is a 15.6 display, some with a touchscreen running windows 8.1, but I'm not sure if this affects your computer's speed) for your price range, a8 or a10 are what you'll find (like your experience already), they are capable a lot and should run their fine programs. You're not going to blaze through any visualization with him, but he'll get the job done. The built-in graphics are pretty good for the a8 and it will play minecraft no problem. The only thing I would recommend is to look at 8GB of ram instead of 4. The gpu uses overall graphics, so your 4GB is probably less than 3 as soon as it's accounted for 8GB inch will allow you to give 1-2GB of ram on the GPU and still have plenty to work with the system. I was wondering if the AMD A8 processor could run games like SimplePlanes, GTA V, Steam Games, etc. You have to give us a budget and your location to give you a good answer. You have to give us a budget and your location to give you a good answer. No, they are outdated and will work on low settings and you have low FPS. If you can find a laptop with Ryzen 5 2400U in it that has a dual RAM channel for you price range you will be infinitely better. These games depend on fast core speeds, and the a8 apu is quite weak. You can check the Lenovo outlet. Look for a device with an Intel processor and a discrete graphics chip. You have to log in or register to respond here.
