Using your own tarot card values cribs much faster than having to stop with each card to consult with the booklet that came with your deck. So in this post, I want to share with you some tips and techniques on how you can create your own tar card meanings cribs. Why worry about creating a Taro Cheatsheet card? Creating your own tarot cheat lists cards can require a significant investment of time, particularly how you work through each of the 78 tarot cards. So why would you even have to worry? Well, rest assured, the benefits are huge! For Taro beginners, preparing your own tarot cheat lists will help you instantly familiarize yourself with each of the tarot cards. Once you've created a cheat list, you have a quick-reference card that you can easily refer to when you're doing your tarot readings. It's much faster than having to spill through all your favorite tarot value maps of books and websites to find the right meaning. For tarot experts, creating your own tarot card keywords is a great way to refresh your memory of each map and maybe even learn things you didn't know about a particular map yet. Also, if you start working through keywords for different types of readings, tarot decks or spreads, you expand your tarot knowledge even further and this proves to be a very valuable exercise. I'm working on developing my own Tarot cheatlists as part of my new book Tarot (should be released in mid-to-late 2011) and found this process to be extremely useful in further developing my understanding of each card. It's also a fun task to link each tarot card with different scenarios such as romance, career Spirituality. Convinced? Well, let's get started! How to make a tarot tarot map Cheatsheet-First, decide how you want to group tarot cards. For example, you can set up a tarot card cheat list, using some or all of the following categories: Basic maps Arcana TarotMinor Arcana Tarot cardsEach Tarot Suit (e.g. Cups, Pentacles, Swords and Sticks) Numbers (i.e. from Ace to Ten) Court Cards (Paige, Knight, King and King)Symbols and/or colors that are shared through the tarot cardsChoose whatever groups make sense to you, and that will easily refer to you as you read each reading. Second, consider adding different categories of tarot keywords to each tarot card. What I mean here is that in addition to listing the common tarot keywords for each card, you can also consider other categories of tarot keywords such as the following: Reverse Tarot cards keywordsKeywords for different types of readings such as relationship and love: Work, career and finance: Spirituality; and health and well-beingKeywords for different tarot decks (e.g. Ryder Waite, Goddess, Toth, etc.) Keywords for different positions of your favorite Tarot Spread. For example, for a Celtic cross, a list of tarot cards values keywords for each spreadAgain position, select any group make sense to you. If you're just starting out with studying tarot, then start with common keywords before moving on to more advanced categories. Next, create a Tarot cheat template so you can easily fill it with the tarot keywords you choose. You can use the table format in Word or Excel, create a handwritten cheat list, or even use a mind map such as the FreeMind Mind Display tool (I love this free mind mapping tool for its flexibility and efficiency). In the template you can include images of tarot cards, numerological or astrological associations and even hyperlinks or links to the pages of your favorite tarot card, meaning websites or books, in case you want to view more detailed values of the tarot map. Now you're ready to start building your tarot card cheat list! For each tarot card, find the actual card in your deck and start exploring it. What words or phrases come to mind? Which images stand out? What is your overall feeling from the map? If you are still very new to tarot, read several different books or websites and look for common words or topics in the card meaning interpretation. Start writing down every thought, idea, word, phrase or sentence that comes to mind. At this stage, you want to be brainstorming, so any idea is a good idea! Once you have exhausted your options, then review the list and select 3-4 keywords or phrases that collectively represent your ideas. Enter this in your tarot cheat list. Continue to work through each tarot card until you your own tarot cheat list. You can also wait another week or two, in case you have new ideas on what keywords to include. Enable. You're happy with the final product, print out your new Tarot cheat list, laminate it and keep it with tarot cards for a quick reference tool.
