Running Imagination is the first art and design basic text explicitly written and designed for college students in the 21st century. Designed for courses in creativity, two-, three- or four-dimensional design, Startup Imagination offers a comprehensive framework on which students, faculty and administrators can build. The approach in this third edition is improved, distilled and updated using more than 600 examples taken from traditional and modern sources. Interviews of artists and designers, known as profiles, introduce students to workflows, career choices, and criteria for excellence from a remarkable group of craftsmen. Launch Imagination is available in a comprehensive scope of 2D design, creativity and problem-solving, 3D design and time-based (4D) design; or in separated volumes containing either 2D or 3D design, as well as material about creativity and problem solving. For more information, visit the McGraw-Hill website. Showing 1-30 Beginning of Your Review Running Imagination October 04, 2019 Brandon Woodward appreciated he loved his decent intro to different ways of approaching art and design. It introduces a lot of basic terms and concepts, so it's pretty readable by anyone. The different sections seemed somewhat repetitive, covering the same concept over and over again in different forms. I wish it was more technical and complex - the reading was all pretty bland. It would be recommended if you are brand new in art, but you should find something more specific to your particular area if you already understand the basic principles of a decent intro to different ways of approaching art and design.
