Virtual Girl Hd IsoFor the first time in a decade, the winner of the Southeastern Conference will be decided in a divisional game. Normally, that would be a pretty good thing. But given the fact that the SEC East has a losing record in the divisional games, it means the new champ has to actually go to a divisional championship game to get there. That's the opportunity we've been talking about all year, and it's finally here: Alabama, with the league's only undefeated record, will take on Georgia, a seven-loss SEC East contender that has won 10 of its last 11 games. The other tiebreaker is the conference record, but I would argue that Bama has a better one than UGA. It's much, much easier to win 10 games and get a playoff bid than it is to go 10-1. How will this game play out? One thing's for sure: The stakes couldn't be any higher. Neither team has been playing particularly well lately, but with Alabama's home game against Mississippi State looming just after the game, and Georgia's game with Texas A&M looming the following week, both need to play for keeps to get into their respective title games. Alabama's strength of schedule, while higher than UGA's, isn't that much higher -- Tennessee (14-3), Clemson (13-4), Auburn (10-5) and LSU (9-6) all have one more loss than the Tide -- but there have been two games in which Bama has had to come from behind in 520fdb1ae7
