In this situation, your provider or government through the provider knows your exact location and almost every detail you enter on any website you visit. And it also shapes the shape of Tunnel security around your network to keep everything you do safe. Before sending traffic to the provider, it encrypts all your data, so that your ISP or anyone, for that matter, can't have any idea what you're doing, except that it's going to one of the servers installed by Avast itself in different countries. On these servers, Avast SecureLine VPN decrypts your data and it gets all the information for you with its own virtual IP and location. When the information is returned, it still stores data under 256-bit AES encryption. So it creates a security tunnel by encrypting your traffic, in and out, so that no one can have a clue about your activities.
