Craigslist twin cities

Sometimes two dominant follicles develop eggs and ovulate. If both are fertilized and subsequently implanted in the uterus, two embryos develop: twins. Because they developed from separate eggs that were fertilized by different sperm, they are called fraternal twins. Fraternal twins share no more genetic information than siblings born separately. In addition, the two daughter cells that remain after a fertilized egg pass through their first division can separate and divide independently from each other. When this happens, they remain loosely connected while in the fallopian tube, and the two blastocysts implant together in the uterine wall. They develop into two separate embryos. Because these embryos came from the same fertilized egg, they share identical genetic material and are called identical twins. The chance of having twins skyrocketed between 1980 and 2004, when the rate of births of twins in the US increased by 70% [source: March of Dimes]. Researchers attribute this jump to increased use of medications and fertility treatments, which can increase the chances of multiple births. However, in recent years, twin birth rates have stabilized, probably due to increased knowledge and the more accurate application of reproductive technology. According to the most recent data from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, in 2008, there were 32.6 births of twins for every 1,000 births, totaling 138,660 pairs of twins born [source: CDC]. Las Vegas: Home of Craigslist Las Vegas Pascal Le Segretain/Getty Images When Las Vegas is created in conversation, our minds tend to evoke some images of choice: gambling, money, drink, women, etc. It's called Sin City for a reason, after all, and there's a reason people from all over the world travel to the intensely hot and desolate southern city of Nevada - they want to go wild. And getting weird and wild means there are a lot of interesting characters out there. Characters who use the same services as all of us, like Craigslist Las Vegas. Craigslist, as everyone knows, is a magical internet forum and a message board where you can buy, sell or discuss anything. There are some things that are off limits, like illegal drugs and guns, but other than that? You can find almost everything your heart desires. Even some absolutely strange items or experiences that you would never find anywhere else. Craigslist Las Vegas: the true wild west In years past, Las Vegas itself was part of the true wild and wild west. In the surrounding deserts and fields, cowboys and Native Americans lived and worked, and at a relatively short distance, scientists and engineers built of America's most secret and destructive weapons in Groom Lake. Not to mention that Vegas was once almost completely run by organized crime syndicates. For these reasons and more, Las Vegas is a one place to find unique or rare items. Many of them end up on Craigslist, among other places. What about some of the weirdest and craziest things? Keep reading. 1. Skunk Skin Bags A bag made of a skunk | Craigslist Las Vegas Las Vegas is a classy city. And nothing class like having a dead possum hanging off your arm. For $90, you could have one. Well, at least someone was selling these things at the same time. The original is gone, but a post about Pecked to Death by Chickens kept his memory alive. A skunk bag would be a one-time purchase—not a big purchase, but a single one. I'm sure you do. 2. Minion Car A Minion Car for Sale | Craigslist Las Vegas Minion hate is strong, but not strong enough to dissuade anyone from building this. It's a 1970 Honda n600, Minion style. According to the poster, The minion windshield is just a cover. I have more pictures. You must see to enjoy. The price? $7, 500. You're going to have to be a big fan of minions to want to fork over that much money. 3. Dinosaur poop dinosaur poop poop for sale | Craigslist Las Vegas There's a lot of poop on Craigslist, but this pile of poop is really a gem. That's because it was once forced through a dinosaur rethre. That's right, this one is a real dinosaur cat - fossilized, and ready to be the centerpiece of your coffee table. Of course, who knows if this was real, unless the seller was an expert in dinosaur poop. The post is dead, but he's still alive. 4. The Women's Disciplinary Manual The Women's Disciplinary Manual is shown | Craigslist Las Vegas A very unique find. The Female Disciplinary Manual is exactly what it looks like: Complete guide to the correctness and punishment of young ladies ranging from the mildest rebuke to the harshest female corporal punishment that is suitable for a civilized young woman. Almost a hundred sections deal with each variety of punishment. Sounds lovely, doesn't it? Keep in mind that this particular poster is selling a first hardcover edition (apparently there are several), hence the steep price of $140. 5. Slot machines in a Las Vegas casino | Philippe Lopez/AFP/Getty Images Being Las Vegas, there are many old and refurbished gaming machines to use on Craigslist. If you want slots, there are many for sale. Some searches have also unearthed a roulette wheel, and even some antique furniture and card tables from the famous casinos along the Strip. 6. A life-size mummy statue A scary mummy statue | Las Vegas Craigslist A house is not a home without some kind of horrible nod to Ancient Egypt, and this life-size mummy statue is the perfect accent for any Vegas dwelling. As you can see, it's a scary mummy. The seller says it would be perfect Halloween decoration, but for a fairly high price of $ it's likely that of many many Price. Besides, he can eat you in your sleep. You just... you never know. 7. Talking Master Doll P A Master P Doll Speaker for Sale | Craigslist Las Vegas Your prayers have been answered. You can finally get that talking Master P doll you've always wanted - or rather needed. In a Craigslist post, the seller states that this particular doll is a little battered, and is losing its hat and microphone. And he doesn't speak anymore; it just makes a buzz. But the seller is willing to meet at Toys R Us if you are interested. 8. Wore underwear A model posing in her underwear | McKeown/Express/Getty Images You've heard that some people are selling—and others are willing to buy—used panties on the internet. True, and a quick search will lead you to various sellers advertising their products on Craigslist. A quick look at the Vegas lists will bring you panties, men's panties and even socks, if that's your thing. And they're all surprisingly affordable. 9. Drugs A Man Exhibiting a Marijuana Plant | Uriel Sinai/Getty Images People who sell drugs on Craigslist have to do it in a hurry before filters and moderators pick up and remove the posts. If you spend some time searching, you'll see short-lived ads for all kinds of drugs – but again, Craigslist won't get caught by the federal government for facilitating legality, so they clean up quickly. But you can still get your hands on certain things, like marijuana. A search for marijuana or MMJ will bring a number of posts for marijuana, and even many services they will deliver. 10. Vegetarian Veggie Action Some Vegetarian Action Series | iStock The casual dating section of Craigslist is infamous for all sorts of depravity. But few posts can overcome this, which is looking for some vegetarian-over-vegetarian magic. Here's a snippet: Attractive, anatomically interesting carrot is looking for someone to appreciate the same. He continues: If you're still reading, I'll assume that your interest is piqued, and that you're the kind of person who has an open mind, and may be interested in exploring vegetables as more than a basic food group, and something worthy of more 'special' attention. It may be a joke, but if it wasn't, would you really be surprised? This is Sin City after all. Follow Sam on Facebook and Twitter @SliceOfGinger More from Money & Career Cheat Sheet: Published on November 20, 2020 I gave birth to four babies (in the five-year period, all full-term babies too). I've been a foster parent to several babies as well. Our firstborn only lived eight weeks. He was diagnosed with a fatal genetic disease several weeks after birth. Our second baby was actually a foster baby we had for 15 months. It was placed when I was seven weeks old. When she was eight months old, I. I. birth of a girl. It was like having twins. And then we actually had twins. I quickly learned that twins are tough. Very difficult. But they're fun too. Our twins are no longer babies. They're six years old. I remember clearly that first year, although much of it seemed like a nebulous existence of sleep. The first six months with my twins were survival mode. They'd both sleep for two hours and then wake up to be fed once more. This routine lasted six months. Sleeping in two-hour increments is not easy. I learned to go to bed at 8:00 p.m., so that the two-hour increments would be sleepy enough to work at 7:00 a.m. when our two-year-old daughter woke up and was ready to start the day. It wasn't easy to have three little ones at the same time, especially with twins who had reflux and colic to complete things. Non-stop crying every night for hours is something I don't wish on any parent. It's possible to survive this, actually. I have friends who have quadruplets. They survived too. Our twin children as newborns were a completely opposite experience to what we had with our aide daughter and our biological daughter when they were babies. The girls were easy babies. They did not need sleep training, as they both slept at night for three or four months of age on their own. They were happy and easily satisfied babies. I could take them to lunch with my friends and they cooed happy and entertained strangers close by with their smiles and baby talk. When I took care of the two girls, it made me wonder why so many mothers complained about lack of sleep, restless babies and the difficulties involved in caring for a newborn. Having very difficult twin babies showed me that not all babies are the same. What I've learned from all these babies That I care about is that every baby is different. There is no defined formula that works for all babies. Every situation is unique, because every baby is unique. You can have an easy baby and this can make you think that all babies are so easy. They're not. If you are like most of us who have been blessed to become parents, you will experience ups and downs daily when you bring a newborn into your home. It won't be pure happiness to have a baby. They are very laborious and draw tremendous energy from mothers and fathers. However, they can provide you with an overflowing heart full of love and joy that you did not know that Possible. Even though not all babies are the same, I can give you some tips to help you navigate the world of parenthood. Below Below 13 practical tips I have for all new parents.1. Recognize that the first year is usually challenging I've heard people say that when they have children it won't change their lives. They will simply take the baby along with them wherever they go. It's a good thought, but it doesn't work that way in reality. If you want to go to a concert, a newborn baby probably won't be able to be brought along. They will cry and interrupt others at the concert. Babies can't go everywhere we go and do everything we're doing. They cry a lot during the first year. They also need power every few hours. This puts a freeze on any lifestyle. The first year is challenging because having a baby will turn anyone's world upside down. If you are the primary caregiver of a newborn, your life and schedule are no longer yours. You have a little human counting on you for food, change, comfort, holding, swinging, being sung, and anything else your baby will need from you. We like to think that our own baby will be an easy baby, especially if that's our own personality. The reality is that most babies are high maintenance. They require 24-hour care and that makes this first year challenging.2. Sleep when the baby sleeps because babies work so hard while they're awake, enjoy sleeping when they sleep. You can't take a nap while they're awake. So don't miss the opportunity to regain sleep while sleeping. It can be tempting to stay up late to watch your favorite show. However, the reality of struggling to take care of a baby during the day when you are sleepless because you stayed up late and then they woke you up four times in six hours will make your day quite miserable. Avoid misery and try to get enough sleep. Often, the only way this is feasible is to sleep when your baby is sleeping. That's exactly why I started going to bed at 8:00 when my twins went to bed. I knew I'd be awake every two or three hours, so going to bed early was the only way to get enough hours of sleep.3. Allow the normal domestic noise My brother and his wife came to visit us a few years ago. In fact, it was an extended stay of 10 days because they had a hurricane in their area. They had a newborn baby who was two months old. I also had three small children who were very noisy and energetic all day. We tried to keep the children quiet so the baby would nap. Like most babies, his son was napping once in the morning and others in the afternoon. At first, their son would wake up with every tiny noise we made at home. There was no that I could do. I wasn't going to vacate our house most of the day, just so your newborn could sleep. I knew something about babies that my brother and sister-in-law hadn't learned yet. They learned this after a few in our noisy house. I told them that if they didn't rush to pick him up every time he wakes up because of a little noise he'll learn to sleep through the noise. By the end of the week, he was napping well through our chaos full of household activities. I did the same thing to my own children. We allow normal home noise, including talking, cooking, and everyday activities to begin. The baby is often sleeping in a nearby room, but they are certainly not cut off from the noise. When you whisper while the baby sleeps and insists on silence in your home for your sleeping baby, then your baby becomes a sleeper who is easily awakened by any sound. If you condition your baby to sleep through normal domestic noises, they will learn to be good sleepers, despite the noise.4. Don't get hung up on other parents' advice and get a lot of unsolicited advice, especially from family and friends. Keep in mind that they are giving advice because they love you and they are trying to help. However, you don't need to follow the advice of others just because they offer. You do what's best for your own baby. Just because your sister says you should wear organic cloth diapers because it worked well for her kids doesn't mean you have to follow the advice. You can say thank you and then do what is best for your own family.5. Accept help when offered babies and small children are very laborious. I hope if you can learn anything from me it's that no baby is really easy. They all require a lot of time, energy, effort and love. When you have trusted people in your life offer to help, then accept your help. My mother-in-law came to help us after the twins were born. She was going to stay a week. She offered to stay longer and ended up extending her stay twice, for a total of three weeks. If she had offered to stay longer, I would have accepted the help. It was a blessing to have her there to help us, as we were in survival mode for the first few months.6. Breastfeeding or Formula: Do what works best for your situationThe benefits of breast milk have been proven by science as better than formula. However, how much better? And at what cost? There are many women who fight emotionally because they are unable to breastfeed for one reason or another. If your baby is being fed, you are doing a good job. Our adoptive daughter only had formula as a child. Many children only have formula because it is the only option available. Our eldest daughter is now a healthy, intelligent girl. The formula did not negatively affect its development. The most important thing was for her to be fed. That's true for all babies. So do what's best for your Situation. If you end up giving away your baby formula, remember that millions, if not billions, of babies have grown into the formula and end up being healthy, intelligent as well people.7. Do not compare your baby with other babies, babies are different. It's not good or bad. Some babies have colic. That doesn't mean they're going to have problems later. My twins had reflux and colic and are healthy and happy with six-year-olds now. Babies all develop at different rates. You can have a baby walking at nine months and another who is not up to 14 months old and both are healthy and happy. Don't compare your baby with other babies. The range of normals for development is quite wide. If you legitimately have a concern about their development, then ask your pediatrician.8. Take a bath, it will make you feel better We often do not take care of ourselves as new mothers or fathers. Many parents spend their lives caring for their children as their own self-care passes along the way. As a new parent, one way to take care of yourself is by bathing daily. It will help you feel refreshed. Even if it's a quick five-minute bath, it will help you feel better.9. Get out of the house and meet other moms/dadsDon't think you have to be a father alone! There are so many groups of parents to participate in. As a new mother, I went to MOPS (Mothers of Preschoolers) and developed some wonderful mother friendships that last for years. Look for groups of local mothers in your private area. Connection is something that is useful for all of us; especially connections with others who are going through the same phase of life and have similar experiences. 10. Get out and Walk If it was you who gave birth, then getting up and becoming active can be difficult at first. Birth is very difficult for our bodies. A simple way to stay active that will help with your mood is also to go out and go hiking. Put the baby in the stroller and walk outside, even if it's just around the block to begin with. You will find that fresh air and blood pumping through your body will help illuminate your mood and spirit.11 Find humor in your new lifeDon't take your life too seriously. Be willing to laugh at humorous things when they happen. For example, the diaper that happens right after you shower and dress your baby. Your little one is happy cooing and smiling at you when it happens while you are literally covered in.... Poop. These things are about to happen. Be willing to laugh and find humor in life.12. Take pictures because the time fliesThe days may seem long, but the years are short. Time passes faster than you will imagine. Take photos and videos even when nothing special is happening because they grow fast. You will blink and they are no longer babies, blink again and they are no longer children. Capture life as it's happening, because tomorrow they're another day older and you can't have that day of Bond with your baby and enjoy the gift enjoy life with your baby and enjoy the little one how they happen. Take the time to breathe the smell of the baby coming from the top of your head, look at them while they sleep peacefully in your arms, and absorb the baby's laughs. These are the precious moments and memories that will keep you stocked through the many days and nights that will be a struggle. They are only babies once, so be sure to take mental pictures of those precious moments that you want to capture for life.
