This is a recycling post from Winewood Farms, my old Blog stardew Valley. I hope to bring the rest of the posts over, too. Stay tuned! #videogameguide #gameguide (Image credit: ConcernedApe) If you're looking for a new stardew valley sprinkler, you're in the right place. Agriculture involves giving your crops the love and care they deserve, and one way to make the process much easier is by using sprinklers. In Stardew Valley, these are created items that automatically water your crops every morning, so you don't need to spend more time, usually every single square with watering can. When you first start your farm, watering may be all you need, but as you expand your agricultural empire, you will need help. Sprinklers are the key to an efficient farm and, with the right Stardew Valley sprinkler layout, you won't need to lift your finger until your crops are ready for harvest. There are three types of sprinklers; The better the sprinkler, the higher its range. It can also be a headache trying to develop a better way to effectively group your crops. But don't worry: Here are three types of sprinkler, materials needed to make them, and mock tips for everyone. Stardew Valley Main Ingredients SprinklerCopper Bars: 1Iron Bars: 1First Sprinkler is the first you'll be able to work out, and it opens at agriculture level 2. They have the reach of one tile and water four common spaces, directly above, below, left, and right of the sprinkler. Although they are the first sprinkler you can craft, they are most difficult to accommodate given their cross shape. There are several different layouts for the main sprinkler, but they all include placing them diagonally, which is a bit uncomfortable. If you want to place them in a neat square, there will always be spaces. Placing these sprinklers can be a bit fussy, but if you put the sprinkler in the wrong place, don't worry, can just hit it it axe or pickaxe to return it to his inventory. However, I suggest keeping your copper and iron bars and missing out on developing these sprinklers to fully develop the best tools. Stardew Valley quality sprinkler ingredientsIron bars: 1 Gold bars: 1Inme quartz: 1The next sprinkler you can unlock at agriculture level 6. The quality of the sprinkler is a massive step up from the core as it allows you to water eight tiles directly around the sprinkler. 3x3 squares are much easier to plan and organize on your farm, too. Find a gold bar and a little quartz in the mines if you're missing those. To get a better coating, place them in two spaces apart so they don't overlap. You can go to a huge area of the same culture or divide the farm into smaller areas of different crops. Stardew Valley Iridium sprinkler IngredientsGold Bar: 1Iridium Bar: 1Battery Package: 1Iridium sprinklers are one of the best agricultural tools of Stardew Valley. They water 24 spaces in a neat 5x5 square. This is a huge area of your farm for mass watering. These sprinklers are the best in the game, but gathering resources to make one takes the job. Gold is not that hard to find and can be found in the mines. The battery is also simple, you just need to place a few lighting rods on your farm. But it's the iridium bars that are harder to find. To get them, you need to go to the skull cave located in the desert. To even access the cave, you will need to reach level 120 in the mine and repair the vault in the community center that will set you back a whopping 42,500G. Iridium is located at the bottom of the cave, so make sure you are decked out in powerful weapons, ladders and bombs to get to them. Even with all the ingredients, you will need to reach the level of agriculture 9 to start crafting. With their 5x5 layout, planning an efficient layout is easy enough. They need to be placed four spaces apart to get the most effective coverage. Columns of three iridium sprinklers will give you 72 watering spaces that you could devote to one crop, or you could go all over the hog and create a huge square of six sprinklers that would water 144 spaces.
