The Summary of the Tape begins with some of the gods of Olympus deciding to descend into the world to live the human experience. So they choose Mexico to spend it and take the life of someone equivalent to what they stand for. Elsewhere nearby, a couple of guys, Pablo and Bibi arrive and argue about howed having sex or not. Paul tries to seduce his girlfriend to get this, but she says he won't because he first wants to get married and then have sex and Paul tells him they'll get married after that. The pair argue and pass Eros, who with his arrows shoots and points to a mirror that reflects Paul and Bibi, and when Paul's attempts seemed useless, the shooter takes effect and Bibi believes what he believes when he tells him to look like a jerk, but I want to know you like you. Thus, Bibi and Paul are ignited by the spark of wild sex and eroticism and passionately kissing on the way to Paul's house. Paul's parents come, who see that he came earlier than usual and only his mother, Julia, secretly suspects and sees that his own son had sex with Bibi. Julia decides not to say anything and leaves. Two hours of total sex after that, Bibi can't believe he was, and just, Paul is proposing to her. Bibi and Paul leave their fourth dresses and surprise parents when they decide to get married. The next day Eros intentionally passes through Paul's house, where everyone has food to celebrate, but when he sees that Bibi is a little upset yesterday, Eros sends another arrow, but he deflights and gives Bibi, but also Julia, forcing them to mistakenly show deep feelings. Aphrodite learns about the immense entanglement of her son Eros and takes the form of a beautiful woman to attract Paul's attention. Paul unknowingly becomes the boyfriend of aphrodite and reveals who he is and his last job, and Aphrodite teaches Paul in love for the first time to teach him what powers of love they play, forcing him to have a relationship with someone and be more empathetic, and Julia realizes each other's intentions, and Julia speaks alone with Bibi. Paul gradually learns what he is doing with his work, but believes that he should retire until Aphrodite takes him to a private room where she strips naked and has sex; Julia tells Bibi that they can't be a couple, as they're both engaged, but Paul comes and listens to what's going on, and automatically feels betrayed and in a strong drizzle. Paul feels the pain of others, and Aphrodite sincerely tells him that it is because knowing what happens to the love he spreads has even more to do with suffering for it. Aphrodite and Eros see Bibi stop Paul, and that's when Julia tells the truth, and he hits her indistishly until Paul arrives. A few months later, Bibi and Julia are sent to a psychologist, where the charms of Eros are broken; Julia and her husband divorce and she campaigns for the battered women, while Bibi cancels the wedding with Paul and they end up and Bibi eventually marries politics. After this mess, the gods decide to return to their place. In addition to several Mexican television actors playing small special roles, they are co-stars: Jesus Ochoa in the role of zeus. Ms Nandy - whose prospects have grown since her composite performance during last week's BBC interview with Andrew Neil - appeared in a comic-style phototrip recording of her quest to find a friend in the Newcastle University Courier student newspaper. The Wigan MP's racy past came to light as fellow leadership candidate Jess Phillips, 38, was revealed as a co-author of a hot or no column in her Leeds student newspaper in which she praised pop star Kylie Minogue's bottom and complained that energy drinks ruined the taste of vodka. Ms Nandy appeared in a comic-style phototrip recording her quest to find a friend at Newcastle University Courier student newspaper Ms Nandy, 40, was a politics student in Newcastle two decades ago. Described in her masthead column as an agony aunt who loves a bit of the hot mail she's shown on a photoshop saying: 'I'll never find Offering a suitable partner. Ms Nandy is pictured with a promising date with her hands pressed to her head in exasperation. The thought of the bubble reads: Oh, my God! I'm not f'ing s'ing that! Later, when she chats with another student who offers her a drink, Ms. Nandy says: 'I'd love a tough one! Actually, d'ya want to go back to me? After apparently having sex with him, the deputy is pictured discussing the incident with a friend. Ms Nandy, 40, was a politics student in Newcastle two decades ago, to illustrate her point, she complains: His w'y was the smallest I've ever seen! I'm going back on the pull. Later, after the intervention of Fairy The Godfather, Ms. Nandy is pictured naked with her hands wrapped around a blonde woman, saying: Oh, I thought you only pierced your ears!! Next to the photo strip she writes: As I have said many times during the year, there are just no fit men at this university... There's a lot of variety at university - virgins, slimy b's, who offer to buy you a drink but don't intend to do such things, geeks, a lot. The trick is how to detect them. Usually you can identify a virgin from a thousand steps because they will be trendy dressers and good at dance music. The only solution is to quit the hunt and wait until after uni when you return among normal people.' In another photo casebook, a male student is pictured smoking spliff to soothe his essay crisis and then gets first for his work. Ms. Nandy writes: Before the anti-drugs lobby gets right on my case, I'm not going to advocate getting caned up to the deadline.' In another column, a third-year student asks how to communicate before the first year of students. Ms. Nandy replies: You could try pulling in the Union when Red Bull and Vodka are on special - it works for me.' Ms Phillips, who last week faced questions about her postgraduate qualifications, was a co-author of the Leeds Student Column ranking of different trends and personalities. Written under Jessica Traynor's maiden name, one column says of Ms. Minogue's bottom: Hot or not depending on the gender you are. Great for you guys, bad for us girls - we pray that these implants or we may lose the will to live. Wigan MP's racy past came to light as fellow leadership candidate Jess Phillips, 38, was revealed as co-author of a hot or no column in her Leeds student newspaper In another recording of the Birmingham Yardley MP writing of Red Bull's energy drink: Necking straight vodka on a can load would be better. It's not so much to give you wings, but instead of insomnia and madness. You so want to forget the evening of a drunken disaster, but instead you are forced to relive it in a painful 'Ms Nandy and Ms Phillips are two of five leadership contenders alongside Emily Thornberry, 59, Sir Keir Keir 57, and Rebecca Long Bailey, 40, whose student years seemed to have been far less racy. Ms Thornberry was a prominent figure in the University of Kent's InCant newspaper as a staunch member of the Labour Party in the early 1980s. The shadow foreign secretary is described as one of the most popular politicians on campus but quit his role in the student union, citing academic pressure and saying: I could continue to be vice president if I lied my way through it, but I can't. Sir Keir, meanwhile, read the law at the University of Leeds, where his only reference to the Leeds student was a personal ad welcoming him as Keir Starmer - the king of middle-class radicals. Rebecca Long-Bailey's leadership bid was thrown into fresh turmoil as she clashed with an aide over her regressive viewsLabour leadership rival Rebecca Long Bailey defended her decision to talk about abortion as she won the abortion She hinted that her concerns were wrong in a bid to damage her bid for a successor to Jeremy Corbyn. There have also been claims from fellow Catholic Labour MPs that she was the victim of attempts to use her faith to smear her. But it emerged that one of her own campaign teams had suggested that people with regressive views on abortion should not be prime ministers. Labour leadership contender Rebecca Long Bailey defended her decision to speak out on abortion as she won unexpected support from the top Tories for her standingMs Long Bailey, the so-called Corbyn succession candidate, found herself at the centre of a bitter Labour row last week after appearing in support of stricter abortion laws. Responding to a questionnaire from local Catholic churches during the general election campaign, she said she did not agree with current rules allowing women to dismiss their child because of disability after 24 weeks. She said she supported the disability rights commission's view that the context in which parents choose whether to have a child should be one in which disability and disability are assessed equally. The Salford MP has now defended her remarks and hinted at the 'Machiavellian' way the story emerged. In an apparent dig at the Red Roar website, which broke the story, she said: 'It was pretty suspicious. There have been certain news sources who have committed this distortion in the last 24 hours. Ms Long-Bailey told Channel 4 News she was by no means suggesting that we should restrict our abortion laws further, but wanted to raise concerns about what the disabled community would feel. Last week, her campaign team insisted that her stance on abortion was her personal view, not her political position, saying she unequivocally supports the right to choose from. Last night, Labour insiders said the remark was another body blow to Ms Long Bailey after a new opinion poll showed her lagging long long for leadership favourite Sir Keir Starmer (pictured) But last night, it emerged that her own newly hired campaign communications chief - ex-Corbyn aide Matt Sarb-Cousin - had expressed doubt about people with similar views on abortion holding high office. Tweeting last year about former Tory minister and abortion critic David Lidington, who also voted against civil partnerships, Mr. Swarb-Cousin wrote: Personally, I wouldn't be too comfortable with someone with such regressive views on LGBT rights and abortion, occupying Number 10, but each in their own way. Sources close to Mr. Sorb-Cousin hit back last night, saying that Ms Long Bailey's views on abortion were in no way comparable to Mr Lidington, who voted for tighter abortion deadlines. One friend said: The difference between David Lidington and Rebecca is she never voted to restrict the right to abortion and only voted to extend it in the Case of Northern Ireland. Last night, Mr Lidington - who said that when he was an MP he usually voted for a pro-life abortion ticket - jumped to Ms Long Bailey's defence. He said: 'She should be entitled to any views she has on abortion and vote accordingly and she should be treated with respect as a matter of conscience. Mr Lidington also contrasts the thought of the police attitude of some in the Labour Party with the Tories who have always treated him as a matter of individual conscience. Separately, two Catholic Labour MPs - Mike Kane and Conor McGinn - said the reaction to Ms Long Bailey's remarks had produced age-related, anti-Catholic bigotry. In an article for PoliticsHome, they said that none of them nominated her for leadership, but we will not stand idly by while her faith is used to smear her or tolerate blatant sectarianism and anti-Catholic tropes. Emily Thornberry is facing calls to sack aide Helen Goodman in her Labour leadership bid amid allegations of bullying by Emily Thornberry last night facing calls to sack a key aide in her Labour leadership bid over allegations of bullying. Helen Goodman is accused of being rude to Commons staff advising her on how to finish her constituency after she lost her seat to Bishop Auckland at the election, according to sources. In an emergency sanction, Speaker Sir Lindsay Hoyle has now denied her one of the special passes that allow former MPs untrained access to the palace Westminster. It considered Miss Goodman, the campaign treasurer of Miss Thornberry, rowed with Commons officials for access to her email. The source said Sir Lindsay had banned her for a year and would consider her only for passage if she passed Commons anti-bullying courses. Last Shadow foreign secretary Miss Thornberry made it clear that she would ignore calls to sack the ex-MP.A spokesman said: Emily knows Helen is not a bully and that it was a warm moment of the incident in that for any standards is a very emotional day when you leave Parliament after so many years of service.' The spokesman added that neither Miss Thornberry or Miss Goodman were aware of the allegation when she was recruited. Miss Goodman could not be reached. ANDREW ROBERTS: Having lost its fourth general election in a row, there is only one thing the Labour Party can do now - cancel itself, let's make a pact, says Homer to his family as they enter the theme park in the long-running TV show The Simpsons. It will be the best leave ever, or we will all agree to dissolve and join other families.' If individual members want to leave and join other parties or even create new ones, that would be a good thing, though probably just another waste of time and effort. It is useless to support an institution that has already fulfilled its historical function by the beginning of the last decade, a party that will not form a majority government again, and even if possible, should not do so. Having now lost its fourth general election in a row - and having lost it entirely - the Labour Party must abolish itself. L-R: Richard Burgon, Angela Rayner, Rosen Allin Khan, Don Butler and Ian Murray take part in the first party of deputy leadership hustingsFounded in 1900, Labour lived to its name during the first 110 years of its existence, representing working men and women of Great Britain in Parliament and Government. In her recent conscious decision to try to become a middle-class party, however, she broke her roots with the people who put him in power three times under Tony Blair.No one born in the last 100 years away from Blair led Labour to victory in the general election. The reason Blair was so successful was that he publicly brushed off socialism by abolishing paragraph 4 of the Labour Party's constitution, which obliged him with common ownership of means of production, distribution and exchange. Today, less than 15 per cent of the population follow socialism as a religion. If it seems likely that the Socialists will win the current civil war in the Labour Party by defeating the Social Democrats, the party will simply repeat its 2019 election fiasco. Much better to finish it. All the while, demographics work against them. In 1969, there were nine million trade unionists - today there are 6.23 million. The share of votes Labour voted for in the first five 1945, was 47.8 per cent, 46.1 per cent, 48.8 per cent, 46.4 per cent and 43.8 per cent. Hardened Tempered Rebecca Long-Bailey is one of two leaders to lead a party that has an estimated 300,000 Socialist and Momentum members on its books in the last five elections he polled 35.2 per cent, 35.2 per cent, 29.0 per cent, 30.4 per cent and 32.2 per cent. It's structural - it's not going to change any time soon. Morgan Phillips, general secretary of the Labour Party in the 1950s, said the party owed more to Methodism than to Marx. Today, however, the exact opposite is true. And for the hard-line Momentum Left to try to coexist with the Blairite Social Democrats more cruelty to both of them. While there was a genuine sense of workers' solidarity when Britain had big industries based on shipbuilding, steel, coal mining and so on, it's just not the case when so many people make a living for the word processors. The hardened left-winger Rebecca Long Bailey is one of two leaders to lead a party that has an estimated 300,000 socialists and Momentum members on its books. But what happens next? Ms. Long-Bailey apparently wanted to appoint Alex Halligan, a Stalinist, who was photographed at a Durham miners' gala with a badge depicting the assassination of Leo Trotsky by Stalin's agent Ramon Mercader in Mexico in August 1940. The badge also has the words Goodnight Trotskyist, a triumphant rhyme that will make any Stalinist smile and any democratic shudder. Does Ms Long-Bailey think the British people are not watching this kind of behaviour with the same stunned shock as when they heard that Jeremy Corbyn refused to sing the national anthem with the queen present at the Battle of Britain Remembrance Service? Joseph Stalin killed six million people and imposed totalitarianism on hundreds of millions more. Anyone who supports Stalin's policies should be seen as a way that goes far beyond civilized discourse and politics in this country, and in any democracy. Now Labour can only pray that Brexit will be a disaster for Britain. Pictured: Jeremy Corbyn's Labour Party has done many great things for Britain in its history. She patriotically supported Churchill during World War II, created the National Health Service, accepted us into NATO, opened the Open University, knocked down John Major and kept us out of the euro. However, even the most recent of these achievements was almost two decades ago. Terms such as bourgeoisie and proletariat have never meant much to the British people, who are decidedly prudent and practical when it comes to their policies. All polls show that the class of consciousness is declining year after year in the UK, which is another problem for a party that is so heavily dependent on class and indignation. If you want to see a truly classless political party, look at the new Tory MPs from the so-called Red Wall seats. East and Midlands.Labour can now only pray that Brexit will be a disaster for Britain. This is their last roll of the dice. But even this desperate hope will quickly be recognised by an unfairly unpatriotic electorate that hopes to get tangled up in Brexit at worst, and, at best, prosper with its new-found freedoms. So for labour party members, the answer is obvious: to dissolve and create two new organisations - the Marxist Momentum Party and the Social Democratic Party. Or join the Lib Dems or Greens.Whoever becomes the next Labour leader will feel that politics is very much like banging your head against a brick wall. It is much better to call time and allow the Labour Party to join the Whig Party, the Country Party, the Liberal Unionists and the supporters of the empire in the annals of British history, political parties that had time under the sun but disappeared once their work was done. Done.
