Australian women s weekly children s birthday cake book pdf

Photo: Getty ImagesThe time comes to open a birthday present, children care about the map as much as they care about the nutritional values on the side of their Cap'n Crunch box. He usually gets tossed aside, a message lost in a mountain of discarded wrapping paper. That's why I love this idea from a Reddit user fouronthedice: Instead of dragging yourself to the Hallmark aisle, grab an inexpensive children's book and write a birthday message inside the cover. The book now serves as a map. It's utilitarian and meaningful - every time a child reads a story, they'll see your special note. Greeting cards are overpriced, anyway, costing you about five bucks-more if you get one of those that pop out at you and sing. You can find classic books for about the same price, such as The Story of Ferdinand, a very hungry caterpillar or, thinks you can think! Or, if your child is a friend of the recipient's birthday, he can share a book from his own library. In your post, include why you chose the book and pay attention to the year. You can throw it in a big envelope or just put a sticky note on the cover so the child knows to look inside. And then turn it on with your gift. The feeling will last much longer than the expensive card with the cat on it saying: Happy Purr-thday! Why three times? Because these extravagant birthday cakes deserve it.
