Just a stab in the dark, but you didn't think you'd go www.dell.com/support, enter your service member number and then get all the drivers you need from there? Hi Gray, Thanks for the reply, there are so many drivers and can you tell me which one to install? shinekumar wrote: Hi Grey, Thanks for the reply, there are so many drivers and can you tell me which one to install? Not. As an IT Pro in this community, you should be able to do this. Installing drivers is a basic foundation and is key to the foundation of IT knowledge and skills. If you can't select an unknown device, you can try using UDI to see if you can provide a more concise description for missing drivers. I don't know without the system in front of me or performing screen sharing (and charging as a customer in my time) to see if I have more information than I already have. It's a tricky to find actually from memory. ... For drivers of e6410 in its security section such as ControlVault driver For all those with small problems related to lack of support regarding operating systems or devices not supported by Dell, this how-to can be enlightening: ... He agreed with Martin's 2012. Broadcom USH is a security manager. ... tricky to find! Broadcom USH = security (even if no fingerprint reader is installed...) Sometimes it is easier (faster) to download a large package, pack *.cab und point Windows driver search into this folder ... Martin2012 is on this site - the Broadcom USH driver is called the ControlVault Driver. Windows 7 64 bit, please download the driver .exe from ... i run into it myself a lot. The automated device doesn't seem to pick it up either. It's just one of those things. Thank you all for your valuable !!! It got fixed from the link provided by JohnC@Dell ... Thank you, John. I'm glad the link helped! Remember to mark martin2012 as the best answer to this as you were spot on with this.
