Check them out now. Continue The first thing you need to prepare is the design of the scenery you want for your shady window. You can draw it or design it with a computer and print it out. Since I don't draw very well, I chose the second option. After I decided how I wanted my landscapes to be, I searched for a different image silhouette that fits my theme and consists of each of my layers using Adobe Photoshop. I wanted my scenery to have 4 separate layers, with the last one being the water reflection effect (upside one). One of the most important things about these kinds of designs is making sure that there are no flying objects; all your silhouettes need to be attached somewhere in the scenery. For example: the last deer in my design is connected to the top of the bell tower; trees, snowman and deer are connected to the ground; Etc. Be sure to include a frame of the same size around all your layers, so you can attach objects to it as well! Make sure to try all your layers together as you make them because they have to fit perfectly with each other and all their details should be visible (if you don't want to) and not hidden somewhere after another layer. In order to recognize them, I gave each layer a different color while I was working on them. When you will do with all the layers, print them out separately and transfer each of them to a stock white card. To do this, I attached a printed layer on the window and put a card stock on it so that I could easily see and trace the outlines of my landscapes. My third layer has a simple geometric shape, so I just drew it with my free hand (see next step). paper cut shadow box templates pdf. paper cut shadow box templates free. paper cut shadow box templates free download. paper cut shadow box templates download. printable paper cut shadow box templates
