Dremel accessory kit home depot

18.2.2017 12:53 ET Order Reprints Print Article Getty Images The house is not always home, but Home Depot (HD) remains a home improvement warehouse. That shouldn't change when the company reports on Tuesday. Analysts expect Home Depot to report earnings of $1.33 per share in the fourth quarter of the fiscal year, which ended March 31, according to FactSet. Sales are likely to have increased 4 percent to $21.8 billion. The results may even beat those estimates. Why self-confidence? Home Depot record: Profits have risen to the top of Wall Street forecasts for eight quarters in a row, with no sign that the winning streak is coming to an end. Home Depot also reports at the tail end of the earnings season, meaning investors already have a wealth of information from companies selling their products in their stores, including paint maker Sherwin Williams (SHW), equipment manufacturer Whirlpool (WHR), tool company Stanley Black & Decker (SWK) and closet maker Masco (MAS). RBC's Scot Ciccarelli argues that their results and guidance were strong enough to signal that Home Depot's earnings should be in order. Supplier channel commentary follows points for healthy growth in the fourth quarter, he wrote in a newsletter to customers last week. Home Depot should also gain momentum from an economy that looks increasingly sturdy. Morgan Stanley's Simeon Gutman said in a report published last month that household formation has been on the rise and that house prices are expected to rise by 4% in 2017. We see a positive risk premium squeak for both Home Depot and Lowe's (LOW) oblique, he wrote. Even wage growth, which can cause problems for many retailers, can be a plus for Home Depot. Scott Mushkin, an analyst at Wolfe Research, analyzed data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics on spending levels and found that consumers spend 15 cents for every extra dollar for housing, the largest recipient in any category. We consider this potentially very good news for our housing-related hardliners, such as Home Depot, Lowe's and Sherwin-Williams, Mushkin explains. The biggest concern about Home Depot may be its appreciation. Its shares are trading at 20.5 times the 12-month profit forecast, above the five-year average of 19.5, and a 1.8-fold sale, above the five-year average of 1.5. But valuation is greater than other factors, says Stuart Kaye, portfolio manager at Matarin Capital Management. He refers to Home Depot's skills in allocating capital – for example, buybacks have generally been profitable – and to the rapid and steady growth of the company. Home Depot doesn't look cheap, Kaye says. But it's no surprise considering the business looks really good. Home Depot shares with the wind at its back. After hitting $134.74 on November 27, 2015, the shares remained in the range, briefly even slightly higher highs in May and August before falling. Last week, Home Depot rose to $143. Historically, new highs have gained more new highs, Kaye says, with shares over three to six months. People are afraid to buy shares on new highs, he explains. But you don't have to be afraid of it. No, we're not. See Trader Extra: Barrick Gold's Beating Email: editors@barrons.com Follow @ben_levishohn Like Barron's on Facebook Follow Barron on Twitter The error has occurred, try again later.
