I have been to an event on our board where they have some Bitcoin wallets for people to sign up and then they have to do a small donation as well. I have seen it already and it does sound like a great idea. As much as I am not a fan of money is money, as long as there is some rational legal limit on the money then I am not that against it. However, I think that there should be a clear purpose for giving to charity or giving to individuals as well. I feel like there are a few charities or causes that people would want to give to but they are very broad in focus. For example, there are charities which support people with cancer or there are charities which try to help animals. But I think you could have some narrower charities which help people with HIV or Alzheimer's or whatever. It could be, for example, that there is a place that one can donate a little bit of money to help them with their overall living expenses. I think the charities should start organizing how they will use the donations. Just for example, I remember that there were many years ago a few charities that were fighting against domestic violence or something like that. You can ask around the different charities and see what they are trying to do. If there are better ways to go about funding these causes, then I am all for the charity using a better method. At the same time, I don't think it is unreasonable for the average person to have a certain amount of money to donate. I am happy to donate some money, but I also think that the government should have a right to have some money as well for good things. For example, I think that the government should have some money to help out the people who lost their homes to the hurricane. I think that as a country we need to work on the government being more open and transparent so that we can have more of a dialogue on the issues. It would make it easier to fundraise for causes if more people are on the same page. I agree that Bitcoin can be used for many good things, but at the same time, I think that the government should get in there and regulate it a little bit. I think we as a society need to start thinking about how to regulate it a little bit, so that we can have more control over how we spend our money. I am not a big fan of the government controlling our money. I think that we as a society need to be more 520fdb1ac7
