... first appeared in the countercultural magazine, Manuel Aron, the cookbook's anonymous author. . . . Manuel was the son of a Barcelona anarchist who had been murdered for the cause. . . . These recipes for black-market groceries represented a movement that ranged from the most loyal to the most apostate. Manuel was an admitted anarchist and, in a common tradition among Spanish anarchists, used the initials A.A. for his name. . . . The authorship of this book is a matter of some controversy. In the late s, Pablo Galindo, a Spanish anarchist who edited a semiofficial anarchist newspaper, made a documentary film, The Anarchist Cookbook, which purported to reveal the book's author. At the end of the film, an anonymous writer by the name of Paul Bourri  [sic] claimed authorship of the book. . . . See @Grupo Confinamiento de armas para lucha armada by Jes s Monz n (@Monzon28).
