Watch videos from the Internet from YouTube for Android. This is the official app that allows you to watch videos from the Internet directly on the Android device. YouTube works just like its web version: subscribe to channels, search videos, see recommended videos, share videos and that it also has voice search and instant search suggestions. You can also throw videos on tv, comment on videos, and also loved and disliked them and letting the world know how you feel about said video. Enjoy watching YouTube videos for Android. Download YouTube Music uses a huge amount of music already on the video service YouTube and creates a service that is more acceptable for listening to sound. The app itself is really more of a modified YouTube, where curation is focused on music and video related to music, but YouTube Red completely changes the game, turning the app into a full-fledged music streaming service, complete with offline playback and background streaming, and even a great feature of just streaming audio without video. Other images Listen to and watch music on your Android device with YouTube Music. YouTube Music is a free app for Android that not only allows you to find all the songs you are looking for, but also allows you to discover new songs. Explore the various playlists and recommendations offered by YouTube Music to fit your context, tastes and trends. This new music streaming service from YouTube has been completely reimagined. It's even easier to find the albums, singles, concerts, covers or remixes you're looking for. For example, a new feature might find a song by entering lyrics. The paid version of YouTube Music (Music Premium) offers continuous listening without advertising or downloading for offline listening through the Offline Mixtape feature. Visit tom's Guide forums for Android issues Download Android /Maemo: Android has many great browser alternatives, but today Mozilla released the final version of Firefox 4 Mobile, which brings tabs of browsing, add-ons, and serious synchronization capabilities on your phone. The main goal of Firefox Mobile is to eliminate the amount of input you do on a tiny smartphone keyboard. This makes it easier for your browsing experience by adding tabs, one-touch bookmarks, and automatically hiding browser control. You can also easily access your history, bookmarks, and open tabs from the address button - just like in Firefox 4 on your desktop, as well as access to custom search engines and at the touch of a tap Exchange. Windows /Mac /Linux: Firefox 4 is official and it's got a lot going for it, including more... More Than the coolest part of Firefox Mobile, however, is its synchronization power. Power. You use Firefox on your desktop, Firefox Mobile is a godsend. You can sync all bookmarks, history, passwords, data forms and open tabs between desktop and phone seamlessly without even doing much. Kevin put it best in our RC review: it's like Chrome on your phone, but it goes both ways and constantly without requiring a click on your hand. Android / Maemo: With most bugs crushed and all its features in place, Firefox Mobile is looking for ... More As we mentioned in our latest Android Browser Faceoff, Firefox isn't necessarily the fastest browser on the block, but it's not slow by any means, and if you use Firefox on your desktop, it's probably one of the best mobile browsers around. Check out the video to see more, or head straight to the Android Market to try it out. One of the many good things about Android is that you can install your own basic apps like... More Firefox Mobile is a free download for Android and Maemo devices. Unfortunately, it's not officially supported by Motorola Droid or some older, low-memory phones, although you can still try it out if you're adventurous. (Pocket-lint) - There are still no plans to bring Firefox to the iPhone or iPad and Jay Sullivan, Mozilla's vice president of products, also told Pocket-Lint that we can also forget about landing the browser on the BlackBerry PlayBook as a native app soon. We haven't seen any changes there, he said at the MWC briefing in Barcelona, referring to Mozilla's relationship with Apple and RIM. There are no plans for PlayBook or iOS. Sullivan wanted to emphasize that Firefox was fully committed to the Android app for its mobile purposes and said that the new Google Chrome for Android browser would not mean the end of its Google-based effort. Right now, apart from Boot to Gecko, we're really focused on Android, he said. It's really got market share, this is where people are and we're off to a good start. We've posted something like just over 8 million Firefox browser downloads for Android, and we have a new update that comes up with some massive performance increases including Flash click to play. When we asked if Google could make it more difficult for third-party browsers in the future in order to promote its version of Android Chrome, Sullivan said: I don't see that happening. We would like to see a competitive browser market and I think Google too. There are several browsers for Android and Chrome only works with Ice Cream Sandwich. We also questioned Mozilla's big cheese about whether Firefox was concerned about Google's growing share of desktops with the usual Chrome browser. Amazon U.S. Prime Day Deals Deals Get all the great prime day deals right here we probably added 100 million users last year, so we continue to grow,' he claimed. We are approaching 500 million users, so we are doing well. The competition is good, it was great competing with Chrome, and we push each other on JavaScript performance, on web graphics, on HTML5 compatibility. This has always been the case between us, Safari, Opera and Chrome. And even IE9 is a reasonable browser. We love him. We like to compete. We influence the Internet because we have a seat at the table. And, as long as we have this place and we make our users happy, then we are happy. Written by Paul Lamkin.
